COMBINING EMBROIDERY WITH LACE.

Six separate kinds of trimming might seem at first thought an over-generous allowance for one little lingerie blouse; but quite as many are shown in this typical new model which illustrates the modish use of embroidery in combination with lace. First, there is the substantial French eyelet banding which takes the place of the usual fabric for the body of the blouse. Three more varieties are shown in the insertions of Venise and Greek patterned fillet, which are attached to the eyelet work by narrow insertions of German val. This val is matched by the frilled edge forming the little pointed cuff. Motifs of the Venise lace are set into the yoke of val and fillet—this yoke in turn being put together with tiny entre deux of lace beading. No solid material at all, mind you—here's a splendid suggestion for the woman lucky enough to own a piece-bag full of pretty leftovers in laces and needlework.

In Women's World.

One of the sex less commonly associated with old lace has discovered, from sad experience, that those of the feminine persuasion are keenly interested in it. He went with one of their number recently to a famous embroidery museum, and after enjoying a few of his favorite paintings it chanced that he passed the door of the old lace room. The gliding of the door opened to his companion, and the rest of his afternoon was filled with strolling over cases and a somewhat tiring sympathetic enthusiasm. If all women are of this cast of mind, the very cover of just published by Stokes, will be enough to sell thousands of copies. The man in question intended to present one to his friend in the hope that the many photographs of specimens will prove a satisfactory substitute for the museum, so that hereafter he may not be diverted from the study of more virile art.

Even tailor-mades, the most severe of all women's garments, intended for the daily promenade morning attendance at the garden, make certain concessions to the new cult of feminine fashions. One's eyes are blinded to the starker, less attractive and even straight fronts of the coats, the severely gored skirts and simple plaited blouses by the deluding softness of the ruche and ruffles of throat and wrist. The uninitiated will scarcely perceive that the difference between last year's suit and this lies in a straighter coat, a plainer skirt, a simpler blouse. Not in the least; it is that small bit of killed cambric at the top of the collar and at the front of the blouse which, when brought home to her the fascinations of the new fashions and make her feel at odds with her wardrobe.

A heavy ribbed serge in one of the new shades of blue-powder, cobalt or marine—is the smart material for the tailor-made suit. Skirts of broken plaids and checks of inconspicuous character, worn with a coat of plain color, threaten to become as popular here as they have been in Paris. The coats have the cutaway fronts, Consulate collars, small sleeves and a rather deep neck opening, which allows a generous display of the killed ruffles of the blouse beneath.

For all the educational system seems to be aware, every boy who enters the primary grades expects to graduate, spend four years in high school, pass on to college, and eventually become a professional or business man, says Rheta Childs Dorr, in the November Deliberator. The schools do not seem to know that any women outside the teaching profession earn their living. That thousands upon thousands of children, girls as well as boys, are obliged by the hard conditions of life to go to work with their hands at the age of 14 seems to be utterly unknown.

The best proof that the educational system has lagged behind is the fact that it is impossible to induce the great majority of children to remain in school a day longer than the law obliges them to. They flee from the school-room at 14, most of them to go to work, and the rest of them to learn work. They want to learn to live, and they are not taught that lesson in the school room.

At the time the public school system was placed on a national basis all the educators were agreed on one common ideal, which was that the schools must be democratic. Courses of study must be founded on the theory of the absolute equality of all American citizens. Therefore, the curriculum was arranged as a series of ladders, leading from the primary school to the grammar school; from the grammar school to the high school; from the high school to college, and from college to the White House.

This was intended to be a democratic program. It was, in fact, entirely aristocratic, since it redounded to the advantage of the children of the prosperous and the intellectual classes.

Fully 95 per cent of schoolchildren never advance beyond the grammar grades, and less than 2 per cent of high school pupils pass on to college.

Now a truly democratic system of public school administration would use these facts for its main basis, since an overwhelming majority of children will never receive any more education than they get in elementary school, the proper elementary school would be, not a link in a chain, a preparatory department of the high school, but a complete thing in itself; a complete education of a very practical nature. Its object would be to educate children for a world of industrial pursuits.
