

Idaho News From Her Main Cities and Towns.

WEEKLY GOSSIP FROM BOISE CITY.

Man and Wife Accused of a Series of Burglaries—Juvenile Court Law Put into Effect—W. B. Slick of Salt Lake Gets a Contract for the "Pin" Road—Woes of a Spokane Mining Man Who Was Taken for a Murderer.

Special Correspondence.
BOISE, Ida., Oct. 19.—Arthur Allen, who is confined in the county jail in this city, accused of complicity in the robbery of Mr. E. D. Buell's test of practically all its contents a few weeks ago, came very nearly getting his freedom yesterday by the appearance of his father with a certified check for $1,000—the amount of the bond under which he was placed in common with the others; but before Allen could turn to draw in a breath of relief, the officers brought forth another charge of burglary against him, and he was re-arrested and held in custody. The jail complaint charges Allen and his wife, who is also in safe keeping, with robbing the cellar of one H. J. Sussler, a rancher residing near Nampan.

The hall of the prisoner was set at $1,000, pending the preliminary; but the prisoners did not furnish it, doubtless fearing there might be brought from some of the officers' pockets still another charge which would stand in the way of their freedom.

ACCIDENT IN YARDS.

On Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the road switch engine, No. 10, which was pulling the train of passenger cars, was standing in front of the Boise depot preparatory to leaving for Nampa, and resulted in the dismemberment of the passenger train engineer, Heckman. Engineer Briggs ran his switch engine past the train and on down the track to get some cars. While he was gone the passenger train backed sufficient to cause the engine to run into the passenger train, and the engine, Heckman, to the floor of the engine, breaking his arm just above the wrist. Aside from battering up the end of the coach, no damage was done.

ANTI-CIGARETTE LEAGUE.

The Anti-Cigarette league held a meeting at the Y. M. C. A. building last Monday evening, where the question of cigarette smoking was fully discussed. There were present about 100 boys, all of whom signed a petition for the passage of an ordinance by the city council prohibiting the smoking of cigarettes by all boys under 18 years of age.

JUVENILE COURT LAW.

The juvenile court law entitled "An act to provide for the care of delinquent children," as passed by the legislature, is being brought into active force in this city through efforts of Trust Officer Clark in his endeavor to get out the provisions set forth in the law. Already he has run down a great number of truants and has started many to school who were kept at home by their parents.

RAILROAD GOSSIP COMES FROM RIGBY.

Special Correspondence.
RIGBY, Ida., Oct. 17.—Work has commenced in earnest on the extension of the Oregon Short Line's St. Anthony branch to Yellowstone park. About 50 men and teams are making the dirt fly and good progress is being made. The line is now decided on crosses the north fork of Snake river just above St. Anthony, and leaves Marysville several miles to the west, but at a point opposite the latter town a branch will leave the main line for Teton basin, with the terminus at Victor. In all there will be about 125 miles of new road built before operations are finally stopped in Fremont county.

In addition to bringing much more park tourist travel to the Short Line, which, it is claimed, will much more than pay the operating expenses, the road will get a heavy lumber traffic, as well as a large agricultural product from the Marysville and Teton basin country. There are also some fairly well developed coal mines in the basin, and the railroad company could do a good business in this part of Idaho, if they chose to take hold and further develop this business. It is proposed to build about 50 or 60 miles of the Park end of the line this fall, and then to complete the balance by the time the tourist travel sets in next June. The scheme also includes the building of a large hotel on the Madison river, where the same energy from the park.

BASALT FAST FORGING AHEAD.

Special Correspondence.
BASALT, Ida., Oct. 18.—One year ago, the 19th of June last, Elias S. Kimball and counselors, the presidency of the Blackfoot mine, visited here and greatly urged upon the people to obey council and build up a town; a town site had previously been secured, but few had taken any interest in the same; they thought wise to change the Blackfoot, which they did, and required the new Blackfoot to set the example and show good faith by moving on the town, which they did, and today the result is that a lot of the 125 is sold, many homes are thereon, and many applicants have been compelled to go elsewhere to seek a building site.

The town is located on the line of the

BOISE'S NEW FEDERAL BUILDING.

NEARLY $500,000 FOR GREEN FRUIT.

About 325 Cars of Prunes and Pears. Sent From Boise Section of Gem State to Eastern Markets. And 100 Cars of Apples Will Follow.

NEARLY a half million dollars is the price brought by the green fruit of southwestern Idaho during the season of 1905, says the Idaho Daily Statesman. That is the estimate of those who are most familiar with the fruit situation in Ada, Canyon and Washington counties. There have been in the neighborhood of 325 cars of refrigerated fruit—prunes and pears—sent east from this section of Idaho, and it is expected there will be about 100 cars of apples sent out in addition to the earlier fruit.

The prunes and pears have brought a gross amount, as averaged by E. V. Martin, the Idaho agent of the Earl Fruit company, of nearly $1,000 per car, while it is believed the gross receipts for the apples per car will be somewhat larger. Thus the total amount received in New York and Chicago and the other eastern fruit centers for southwestern Idaho fruit during the season will be nearly if not quite half a million dollars. Three cars of Idaho

Italian prunes were sold by the Earl Fruit company in New York for $1,493. "A conservative estimate of the present population of the state of Idaho is 250,000 people. This estimate is based upon the number of children of school age in the state. According to figures compiled from reports sent to the state superintendent of public instruction by school superintendents of the various counties there were 75,000 school children in the state in June, 1905. Since that census there has been a large immigration to the state and I believe I am safe in estimating that the present population of Idaho is a quarter of a million."—State Immigration Commissioner Allen Miller.

TRoubles OF MINING MAN.

A. Burch, the well-known Spokane mining man, formerly manager of the Bunker Hill mine, arrived here Monday evening on a special train, and was met by a number of his friends. He is now doing mission work in Sweden. This part of the country promises to become a great shipping point for fruit, as most hardy trees do well, and many orchards are being planted. About 1,400 trees having been set out last spring. Grain and all farm crops in general have been good this season, and the farmer and stock raiser are both well pleased. Farmers are very busy with threshing, and the harvesting of sugar beets.

ANOTHER FAKIR HAS BEEN EXPOSED.

The Career of "Prof." Osmar Reddick, Late of Idaho, Now Anti-Mormon Lecturer. Endorsed by Dubois and T. Kearns. Special Correspondence.
CULTMAN, IDAHO, Oct. 17.—"Prof." Osmar Reddick, the gentleman who is dishing out a lot of rotten hash through Kansas and Indiana regarding what he knows about the "Mormons" and their religion, taught the Cultman district school last winter, and your correspondent has the honor of boarding the gentleman for some time while here, and became pretty well acquainted with him. That he is the sleekest rascal and dead-beat of a man without principle, scores of people here and at Idaho Falls will testify as he left here a thief in the night, with a lot of unsettled accounts.

The Relief society at this place gave an entertainment, and he volunteered his services, which were accepted by the sisters, for which they presented him with a $5 gold fountain pen. Imagine now their surprise in hearing what he has to say about our people. "The Mormon girls believe here, and prostitution by their parents, to say nothing of the rest." When Thomas Kearns, ex-U. S. senator from Idaho, said that Prof. Osmar Reddick understood the "Mormon" question, he does not know what he is talking about, as during his five months' stay here, "Prof." Reddick only attended one meeting, and then expressed himself as very favorably impressed, and said he was entirely ignorant of any of the Latter-day Saints' principles, and had never cared anything about religion. In evidence of this, Mr. Reddick might get a little more money than he did teaching school at Cultman, Ida.

SNOW STOPS BEET HAULING AT SUGAR.

Special Correspondence.
SUGAR CITY, IDA., Oct. 19.—The ground is covered with snow and beet hauling, except in certain favored localities, has been suspended. During Tuesday and Wednesday it kept snowing at intervals making outdoor work difficult or impossible. The weather, however, seems to have changed for the better which if continued, will permit the harvesting of beets to go on in two or three days. The newly fallen snow came very near to causing a serious collision between two engines while switching in the depot yards. The two engines were approaching each other at a speed not too great to be under perfect control under normal conditions, but the snow caused the wheels to slip and when the brakes were applied they did not take effect, and the result was that one of the engines had to be taken to the shop for repairs. Though quite badly shaken up not one of the train crew was hurt. This is the second accident in the depot yards within the last 10 days, the other one resulting in the killing of a fine team of Bishop Ricks and a close call for the driver.

CASSIA COUNTY AS A BIG WINNER.

Special Correspondence.
AKLEY, Cassia Co., Ida., Oct. 17.—Another young professor made his appearance at the home of Principal Albert M. Merrill last night. All doing well. Mrs. L. W. Robbins, who gave birth to a fine girl on the 11th inst., is in a very critical condition at this writing. Mrs. Charles Walker died this morning, having been long and severely ill. She has been highly respected and leaves a husband and four children, who have the sympathy of the community. During the absence of your correspondent to Salt Lake last week Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Matthews lost their beautiful daughter, Clara, a victim of typhoid fever, from which she had suffered for several weeks. There are a number of cases of sickness, mostly fever, in the ranges at present caused by the protracted spell of dry weather. Although cold weather has set in there is still no sign of rain. The fields and ranges are distressingly dry. Stock will suffer on the ranges this season. Hay is bringing $5 per ton in the stack and will go higher. The good word comes from reliable sources that Mr. M. E. Young, principal contractor on the south side of Snake river has just taken another section of main canal extending some distance below Goose Creek. This is gratifying news to the homesteaders located on the dry desert lands in Cassia county. Mr. D. W. Ross is pushing the completion of the dam across Snake river with all possible speed, and the ## DOG DELIVERY AT POCATELLO, IDA.

Official Catcher Defrauded Out of His Felts by a Sympathizing Marauder—Artist Arrested for Enticing Young Girl Away From Brigham City—Women's Synodical Missionary Society Holds an Interesting Session and Elects Officers.

Special Correspondence.
POCATELLO, Ida., Oct. 19.—The third jail break in the last two months occurred here Monday night. The prisoners were all under sentence of death, but the sheriff has refused in terms most positive to lend the aid of his office toward recapturing the escapes. It appears that the local dog-catcher had been doing "his strenuous life" stunt for the last few days, with the result that he had gathered in as fine a collection of curs, big, little and different, as Pocatello's dog population would furnish. The dog-catcher receives so much pro rata for each canine "arrested," but when it came to the dog prison bright and early upon the morning, it was to find that some malicious person or persons had broken in the door from the outside, and "the place that knew the canines once, should know them no more, forever."

for Brigham with his man, and a very penitent girl. The Women's Synodical Missionary society of the synod of Utah was in session here last week. The services were held in the Congregational church, and a large number of visiting delegates was present. An address of welcome was given by Mrs. E. C. White, which was responded to by Mrs. H. H. Kinney of Boise. A report of the meeting of the women's board at the general assembly held at Wisconsin, Ind., last spring, was given by Mrs. H. H. Kinney. Reports on young people's work, the Freedmen's board and the temperance cause were given by Miss Freeman, Miss Herron of Mount Pleasant, and Mrs. Hayhurst of Salt Lake City. Letters were read from Mrs. Fife and Mrs. McCusker, missionaries in India, who are partially supported by this society.

RUNAWAY COUPLE.

A neat piece of detective work was done by Deputy Sheriff Will E. Howard, who was wanted at Brigham City, Utah, for forging a number of checks, and enticing a young girl from her home. The officers at Brigham telegraphed the local officers a description of Howard and the girl, and Officer E. J. "Spot" the man among the passengers just alighting from the morning train, and noticed him out to Deputy Sheriff Sell, who immediately took him in charge. When accused by the officer Howard denied being the person wanted, and claimed that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young lady had convinced the officers that they had the right party, and they immediately hustled him off to the city police station. Here he admitted his guilt and stated that his name was J. P. Ayers, and that his home was in Columbus, O., and that he was on a vessel for some foreign port, and was on his way to Portland. However, an interview with the young