Miner Crushed to Death by a Sudden Fall.

BABY DROWNED IN A SLOUGH.

Negro Shoots a Boy Through the Leg—Other Killed by a Railroad.

The Wheeler crop of Washington this year is said to be the largest in the history of the state.

A Rock Springs (Wyo.) miner was killed in the Union Pacific coal mine, Carbon, Wyoming, on Wednesday evening.

The body of James Johnson, a Wyoming sheep shearer who was drowned the other day, was buried at Douglas, Wy., on Friday and Thursday.

The 18-months-old son of A. B. Dixon, clerk of Richmond municipality, B. C., was drowned Tuesday by falling into a tub of water.

Henry Shaw of Santa Cruz, Cal., died Tuesday as a result of injuries sustained in falling from a scaffold a few days ago. He was a German, age 56 years.

Thursday evening, the city council of Pocatello, Idaho, passed an ordinance increasing the licensing for drinks and cigars, and also miscellaneous games.

Frank Chapman, accused of killing Dan Green at Porter's sheep ranch on Lost river, Idaho, on Christmas day, was acquitted Tuesday, his claim being self-defense.

A rock and mud slide Tuesday afternoon, near Illecillewaet tunnel, B. C., on the Canadian Pacific railroad, killed five men of McCraer's crib gang and mainly injured another.

Thursday morning an engine and a set stock train on the Union Pacific collided at The Hoding. The engineer of the freight train had his leg broken, and considerable other damage was done. Passenger trains were delayed two hours.

Tuesday morning a wheelman ran into a two-horse team driven by young Otis Forgey, who lives in Fresno, Cal. The horses ran away, throwing Forgey on his head, while one of the wheels passed over his shoulder. No bones were broken, but the young man had a number of teeth knocked out and is dangerously bruised.

An accident occurred at the Brown Bear mines at Deadwood, Cal., Monday afternoon, in which George J. Haskell, a miner, was killed. Haskell and a man named Pierson were working on a lease, clearing out old flume, when a fill started, breaking the timbers and crushing Haskell, killing him instantly. Pierson narrowly escaped. Deceased was about 42 years of age.

Here is a home thrust on advertising which one Sacramento, Cal., newspaper gives to another. The city editor of our contemporary, the Bee, having lost his spectacles, promptly advertised the calamity in the Bee, but receiving no response from finders, for a very excellent reason that is obvious to all who are sensible of the best methods of reaching the public, he crossed the street and advertised his loss in the Record-Union, where the announcement of his bereavement would be seen by far the larger number of the reading public. He did not calculate without his host. On the very day that the advertisement of the loss appeared in the Record-Union a lady of a prominent family brought the lost eyeglasses to this office for restoration to their owner, and they now repose in security upon the ample bridge of his nose.

Sheriff Burr and posse of Los Angeles, California, on Tuesday afternoon captured near Azusa a negro who gave the name of Jasper Wood, and who for several weeks past has terrorized the women of that vicinity. Several weeks ago at Glendora an attempt was made by an unknown man to drag a girl into her south door at midnight. Her screams aroused the household and the culprit escaped in the darkness. A few nights later a similar occurrence took place a few miles from the scene of the first assault, but pursuit was baffled because of a lack of means of identification, shortly after 1 o'clock Monday night Miss Addie Woods, who lives with her parents in a cottage near Azusa, was awakened and found herself in the arms of a negro, who was endeavoring to carry her through an open window. Her screams aroused her mother, and the man escaped in the darkness. Bloodhounds were put on the trail, and the sheriff and posse captured him Tuesday afternoon fifteen miles from Azusa. He gave the name of Jasper Woods, and said he had entered the house for shelter.

FITS IN CHILDREN.

How to Relieve the Sufferer Quickly. Cause of the Trouble.

A convulsion, or spasm, is seldom serious. In children there are many causes of convulsions, and the seriousness of any given case depends wholly on the cause, not on the convulsion or the spasm itself.

Children often have convulsions from an overloaded stomach or from a sudden chill, just after eating, which stops the digestion. An emetic is what is needed in such a case. A half teaspoonful of salt dissolved in one-third of a cup of warm water, to which a half teaspoonful of ground mustard has been added, and the whole given at a dose, makes the quickest, safest and best emetic in such a case or in a case of poisoning.

The so called "worm fits" often come from undigested food in the stomach and can also be relieved by such an emetic. Treatment for a convulsion of this sort while it is in progress is not of much use and often does harm. It is, as a rule, better to manage a spasm in a child the same as an epileptic fit in an adult.

In epilepsy remove the patient if necessary to some place where there is no special danger of his getting hurt, loosen the clothing on the neck and chest and then let him alone. Keep every one out of the way and give him plenty of breathing room, and on no account try to hold him still nor stop the convulsion. You cannot do it if you try. It is sometimes well to put a large flat cork or a thickly folded cloth between the teeth to keep the tongue from being bitten. After the convulsion is over the patient will often go to sleep. Let him sleep until he wakens of his own accord. Hysterical convulsions do not require any notice taken of them at all and will pass over sooner if unnoticed. If one is in doubt whether a convulsion is hysteria or epilepsy, manage it as for epilepsy.

Convulsions in children are liable to come on at the beginning of brain fever (cerebro spinal meningitis) and lung fever.

How Sawdust Can Be Utilized.

Many people would be surprised to know that fuel, as well as a very acceptable kind of plastering material, can be made of this apparently useless substance. Compressed with pitch, it is formed into blocks of excellent kindling wood. For plastering walls and ceilings it is mixed half and half with sand and clay. Oxalic acid may also be made from it. It is a good litter for stables and has some fertilizing properties. It is also an excellent packing for eggs, ice and various other things.
