

but as you recede from its tideless shores, the hue deepens and gains in intensity, till the sky above cannot rival its radiant, delusive blue. Captive sunbeams float fathoms deep on the bottom in waving lines and circles; light scintillates through every drop; little ripples make shadows which chase the sunny circles down below. Patches of green moss are spread here and there over the white strand, adding to the beauty. Mountainous islands on which are springs of fresh, clear water rise from the lake; they were formerly used for pasturing stock, and it is intended to build on them pleasure resorts.

A dip into this enchanting lake is a delightful surprise. Of course every one knows that its density upholds the body so that it is easy to recline on its surface as if on a comfortable lounge, but the experience is new and pleasant. But the bather needs to beware for his mouth and eyes. The waters of Marsh are not more bitter or burning.

The sun swings low in the west like a glowing censer throwing out long flames which rest for a moment on the radiant waters of the lake, and like incense there floats a golden mist which envelopes and glorifies mountain and shore.

Now the mists change into amber,
Twilight shadows creep along
Slowly, like the sense of slumber,
Through the solace of a song.

FIRST DISTRICT COURT.

Before Judge Judd, at Provo, yesterday, the session was held with closed doors, on account of the trial of Ed. Jones and two other negroes, for rape, said to have been committed at Ashley. The defendants were soldiers in a company quartered at Fort DuChesne, and the testimony went to show that the trio made an assault upon a family named Reeves, knocked down the two men present, and outraged the mother and two daughters. The trial was in progress at the adjournment last evening.

In the Ogden branch of the First District, Judge Henderson presided, and the following cases were brought before him:

In the case of Martin Gardner vs. Hiram Goddard et al., an order was entered taxing costs at $79.50.

In the case of A. N. Traustrom vs. S. L. Svenson, an order was entered taxing costs at $36.45.

In the case of A. F. Danielson vs. Mrs. Wheeler, the court ordered that the child be committed to the care of Rev. Frank Barnett during the pendency of the divorce suit of Mr. and Mrs. Danielson or until further orders of the court. Mr. Barnett to take the child next Monday, and that the parents be permitted to visit their child when they so desired.

In the case of John J. Kelly and wife vs. A. J. Kershaw and wife, a motion for sale of other property was argued, at the conclusion of which the court took the matter under advisement.

Wm. H. Maughan, charged with unlawful cohabitation, pleaded not guilty and trial was set for Wednesday, Nov. 21st.

N. Tanner, Jr., stated that Richard Thorne, indicted for unlawful cohabitation, had given himself up expecting to be ready to plead, but was suffering from a severe spell of sickness, and asked that the taking of the plea be put off for some time. He was given until the second day of the November term to plead.

Oliver E. Smith, Samuel W. Obery, Thomas W. Obery, Willard Hansen, Robert Baxter, Charles Bailey and Charles Henry Barrett charged with unlawful cohabitation, waived the reading of the indictment, and took the statutory time to plead.

Absalom Woolf pleaded not guilty to unlawful cohabitation.

James Henry Brown pleaded guilty to unlawful cohabitation, and sentence was set for December 1st.

Daniel Hill pleaded guilty to unlawful cohabitation. He had nothing to say before sentence. He was 43 years of age, a native of America, and had but one plural wife, whom he had married in 1889. Had been absent from his home at Wellsville for three years; had spent that time in Hawaii. His youngest child was about two and a half years old. Defendant had no property. The court sentenced him to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $100 and costs, to stand committed until the due and costs are paid.

Thomas Duce also pleaded guilty to unlawful cohabitation. He had no promise to make, but asked the leniency of the court. He presented a certificate from Dr. Ormsby, showing that he was suffering from the effects of a severe accident which happened some nine years ago. He said he was 43 years of age, and had one plural wife, whom he married in 1879; his youngest child was but two years of age. The court sentenced him to three months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $100 and costs. The judge stated that the three months were remitted owing to his state of health.

Both of those sentenced are "Mormons;" they were taken to the penitentiary last night.

POLICE ITEMS.

Nels Nygard was arrested last night for being drunk, and today was fined $5.

There was considerable crowding in front of the Theatre last evening before the performance began. An individual named John Lutz was in the throng, and getting angry at not being able to push his way along as quickly as he wished, he began to pour forth a torrent of profanity. He was remonstrated with but would not cease his ungentlemanly conduct till a police man tapped him on the shoulder. His improper action cost him $5.

John Ellsworth battered Ben Cleaver in a saloon last night. Today Ellsworth was fined $30.

Four verdant youths were arrested at an early hour this morning for disturbing the peace. They created a disturbance by going along the street, shouting at the top of their voices and arousing the neighborhood. They were released on their own recognizance to appear in the Police Court this afternoon.

George Showell, for putting rubbish in the street, paid a fine of $10.

Eph. Kelly was in again for drunkenness. He told the court that if he would let him off light he would reform, but this promise had been made and broken so often that the court could not entertain it, and Kelly was sent up for 25 days.

F. S. Fernstrom is under arrest for maintaining a nuisance.

An individual who gave his name as Johnson was fined $10 for making a nuisance.

Sam. Newton has become notorious for his quarrelling propensities. He has been before the Police Court frequently, and today added one more to the list. His offense on this occasion was battery. Last evening J. Mahlstrom was walking quietly along the street when Newton walked up to him and struck him four or five heavy blows in the face. Mahlstrom shouted "murder," and Newton was jailed. Today he entered a plea of guilty, and in default of $100 cash to pay the fine assessed, will work in the chain gang for 100 days.

THE JOLLIFICATION.

Scenes at the Demonstration on Saturday Evening.

Never before has Salt Lake City witnessed a scene like that at the republican jubilation on Saturday evening. When the democrats gained the victory that placed Grover Cleveland in the White House, four years ago, the demonstration was entered into in this city by a much greater proportion of the populace than was the case last evening, but for the "howling" portion, the event of Saturday evening eclipses all else; yet, as a prominent politician remarked, "as compared to cities in the east, this is nothing—this is a baby whirlwind compared to a terrible cyclone."

During the day many business houses, private residences, hotels, etc., had been beautifully decorated with the national colors; Chinese lanterns and other means of illumination were bountifully provided; of transparencies and banners bearing various legends and devices there was a plentiful supply; the horns were gathered in from every source; the block of fireworks in the city was heavily drawn upon; and huge piles of tarred barrels and boxes were stacked for bonfires at each corner of the block on which the Opera House is situated.

A very few minutes after 7 o'clock, the proceedings of the evening commenced by the lighting of the bonfires. Crowds began to assemble, and half an hour later, the time for the parade to commence, there were probably 10,000 people on the streets. The procession formed, in conformity with the previous arrangement, in front of the Opera House, and headed westward; it turned northward along West Temple to First South, then east to East Temple, along which street it led to Second South, and then turned into the Opera House. The procession itself was about a quarter of a mile long, nearly all of those participating in it being on foot.

The lighting of the bonfires was the signal for a general illumination and the inauguration of a pandemonium such as has never before been witnessed in Salt Lake. Red fire, rockets, bombs, etc., were seen and heard on every hand. Along the streets, crowding their way through the multitude, were gangs of hoodlums, who with their shouting, their blowing of trumpets, clanging of bells, and beating of tin cans, created a deafening tumult. The procession itself presented a ludicrous sight, while many of those engaged in it aided in increasing the fearful din.

Probably one-fourth of those in line carried torches or banners, and presented from a distance a pleasing appearance. Most of the remainder had horns, bells, or some other article with which to make a noise. As the column moved along the street the uproar was terrific. Shouting, swearing, singing, cheering, playing of bands, beating of drums, blowing of horns, ringing of bells, bursting of bombs, howling, screeching, whistling—all were combined in the maddened throng, and the demon of confusion held high carnival, while thousands of people looked on in amazement at the change wrought in our hitherto peaceful town. It seemed as though a spirit was rampant which caused those who took part in the affair to lose all control of themselves and join in the effort to augment the general uproar. Fancy, for a moment, a staid man of business, with a flaming torch in one hand, a flag in the other, his hat on the back of his head, yelling and screaming at the top of his voice, while his gait suggested that of a half-drunken ruffian; or a talented lawyer, with torch and long tin horn, the latter being brought into almost continuous requisition, except when its manipulator desired to give vent to a yell or cheer. Yet such scenes were the rule rather than the exception. The latter end of the procession may have been made up from respectable ranks, but their demeanor was in every respect that of hoodlums.

In the Opera House, which was nicely festooned and decorated, the tumult was simply terrific, though there was a sufficient lull to hear the speakers the greater portion of the time. These were C. C. Goodwin, E. P. Ferry, C. S. Varian, Arthur Brown, J. R. McBride, C. W. Bennett, Judge Zane, Mr. Blackburn, and Wm. H. Dickson. Most of the language used was that of rejoicing at the defeat of the national democratic party in the presidential campaign. All except Judge Blackburn expressed their joy at what they deemed the gloomy outlook for the Mormon people.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That on the election of the gallant soldier and accomplished statesman, Benjamin Harrison, as President, and that experienced legislator and noble-hearted citizen, Levi P. Morton as Vice-President, the republican party has restored itself to the control of national offices by the selection of leaders who are an honor to their party, and at the same time a credit to the whole country.

Second—That while as republicans we rejoice in the success of our party and in the triumph of its principles, and congratulate the country and ourselves upon our glorious success, we feel that as citizens of Utah Territory we have special reasons for joy at the result of this election. We have had grave fears that the re-election of Grover Cleveland would perpetuate the power of the Mormon theocracy and the escape from that danger gives to this victory the most exquisite satisfaction.

Third—That as republicans we are proud of our party, of its history, and achievements. Proud of its standard-bearers, now our representatives for the next four years, and express with all reason our faith and confidence that under their guidance the nation will advance and prosper, Utah be reformed and redeemed.

It was a late hour when the assemblage separated, and later still when the streets were cleared and quiet restored.

AT OGDEN

there was a smaller edition of the scene in Salt Lake. The Mormons were pretty well left alone there, and the participants in the festivities expressed their feelings in speeches, music, illuminations, etc.

LOGAN AND BRIGHAM

also indulged in bonfires and similar accompaniments to those had in this city, but of course to but a limited degree.
