Report of Beecher Investigating Committee.

The Plymouth Church Investigating Committee submitted their report to the church meeting tonight. The report begins with copies of Beecher's letter to the examining committee asking an investigation, and nominating the members of the committee whom he desired appointed. The committee first express regret that uncontrolable circumstances made the public discussion of the unhappy scandal necessary, but state that they accepted the situation as they found it, as a solemn trust, and that they were profoundly impressed with the grave importance of the work before them. The committee refer to the letter of Tilton to Dr. Bacon, making the charges against Beecher, and to the rumors and insinuations against Beecher's character which were afloat, all of which he wished to be inquired into. They say they have faithfully endeavored to make the investigation thorough and impartial, and to obtain such facts as are relevant to the inquiry from all attainable sources of evidence.

The Witnesses.

For this purpose they summoned or requested the attendance of the following persons to testify before the committee: Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton, Mrs. H. W. Beecher, Samuel Wilkeson, John R. Howard, Theo. Tilton, Samuel E. Belcher, Mrs. N. B. Morse, Oliver Johnson, Rev. R. S. Storrs, D.D., Dwight Johnson, Isaac H. Bailey, Mrs. Putnam, John W. Mason, Rev. W. W. Patton, Mary C. Ames, Richard P. Buck, Francis P. Carpenter, Albert F. Norton, Thomas M. Valli, E. M. Holmes, Hon. N. B. Morse, Mrs. Mary B. Bradshaw, Joseph Richards, Miss Elizabeth A. Turner, Frances A. Stiles, M. D., Charles Corez, M.D., Dr. Menton, Miss Oakley, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Ovington, Mrs. Wallace, S. B. Halliday, Thos. G. Shearman, Benjamin F. Tracy, Francis D. Moulton, Franklin Woodruff, John W. Harman, and the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher. Most of the persons named attended, as requested, before the committee. One notable exception is Francis B. Carpenter. Francis D. Moulton promised to testify fully, but failed to do so; he has submitted three short statements in writing to the committee, consisting chiefly of the reason why he declined to testify, and of promises to testify at the call of the committee. The committee have called him three times with the results stated.

What was Beecher's Offense?

The committee call attention to the fact that the letter of Tilton, on which the investigation was based, charged no definite offence, but only made vague allusion to an offence of some sort, said to have been committed by Mr. Beecher against Mr. Tilton, and for which he had apologised; therefore the question before the committee was, What offense, if any, Beecher had committed against Tilton?

Adultery.

The committee then reiterate the fact of Tilton appearing before them and definitely stating the charge, alluded to in the Dr. Bacon letter, as that of adultery with Mrs. Tilton, at various times and places during 1868 to 1870. They call attention to the fact that the offense, as first alleged by Tilton, was improper solicitation by Beecher to Mrs. Tilton, but as time passed and purposes matured, this charge passed and matured into another form and substance.

Friendship of Beecher and Tilton.

The committee then recite the facts deducted from the evidence before them of Beecher and Tilton's intimacy, of their friendship while they were together editing the Independent, showing that the former was urged by the latter to visit his house and to do his editorial work there, and that in every way he understood and approved of the friendly relations existing between Beecher and Mrs. Tilton.

Tilton's Apostacy—Mrs Tilton Unhappy.

They find that the friendly relations between Tilton and Beecher continued until December '70, when Tilton's conduct on the Independent having injured the paper, especially in the west, he having come to deny the inspiration of the Scriptures and the divinity of Christ, and his social views having about this time also undergone a radical change in the direction of free love. This change in her husband's character affected Mrs. Tilton deeply, and being a very religious woman, she naturally sought her pastor for counsel and sympathy, and she set forth in strong terms, the suffering that her husband's course was causing her.

Mrs. Tiltons's Love for Beecher.

It now appears that during these years, Mrs. Tilton became strongly attached to Mr. Beecher, and, in July, 1870, confessed to her husband an overshadowing affection for her pastor.

Mrs. Tilton Leaves her Home.

On or about Dec., '70, Mrs. Tilton left her husband, going with her children to her mother's house. She sent for Mr. Beecher and told him of the suffering and trouble her husband had subjected her to, which greatly shocked Beecher, and he, by Mrs. Tilton's permission, sent his wife to her, as he considered her judgment in such matters better than his own. Subsequently he agreed with his wife in advising Mrs. Tilton to leave her husband. Tilton, however, forced her to return to his house, by sending for and obtaining possession of the youngest child, who was sick with the croup. During Mrs. Tilton's temporary absence from her mother's house she suffered a miscarriage, the day after her return, on the 24th, which resulted in a serious illness, continuing until after the 1st of January.

Bowen Gives Tilton Notice to Quit.

The committee then state that early in December, Bowen gave Tilton notice of his discharge from the editorship of the Independent; that on or about the 20th of December, Bowen made a contract with Tilton by which he was to be editor of the Brooklyn Union, and chief contributor to the Independent for five years, but Bowen afterwards heard such stories of Tilton's immoralities as alarmed him, and led to an interview between himself, Tilton and Oliver Johnson, at Bowen's house.

Tilton Demands Beecher's Resignation.

At this interview Tilton sought to retain his place and Bowen's good will, by offering to join Bowen in an attack on Beecher. The interview resulted in a letter, which Tilton wrote and signed on the 27th of December, demanding that Beecher leave the Plymouth pulpit and Brooklyn. The report says that Bowen delivered this note, and that Beecher expressed astonishment at its contents. Bowen derided it, and told Beecher why he had reduced Tilton from the editorship of the Independent, and said he doubted whether he ought to retain him as editor of the Union. Beecher thought he ought not, and spoke strongly in regard to the threatening letter of Tilton's. Bowen declared that if trouble came of it he would stand by Beecher.

Tilton Extorts a Confession from His Wife.

This conversation Bowen carried to Tilton, who thereupon extorted from his sick wife charges against Beecher, of having made her improper propositions. The committee then give a report, the substance of which has already been published, of Beecher's interview with Tilton at Moulton's solicitation and at his house, and of the charges brought by Tilton against Beecher, and the production of the confession of Mrs. T.; the amazement of Beecher at finding the woman, whom he had thought to be a type of moral goodness, subscribing to such an atrocious story; the night visit to Mrs. Tilton's bedside, the written retraction given to Beecher by her, and the subsequent procuring of this document from Beecher by Moulton's specious arguments and the displaying of a pistol, though he made no distinct threat. The committee here express great regret that, at this juncture Moulton was not handed over to the police, and thus saved much subsequent trouble. The committee say that Beecher's distress at the situation was boundless. He saw the peril of being even falsely accused; he blamed himself for much that had occurred, he could not tell how much of impending trouble could be attributed to Mrs. Tilton's undue affection for him, which, as it was his duty, he repressed.

The "Confession."

While in the morbid condition of mind produced by these distressing difficulties Moulton again called on him. His manner was kind and conciliatory; he professed, however, to believe that Beecher had been the cause of Tilton's downfall, that he had leagued with Bowen against him, and by his advice come near destroying Tilton's family. Beecher expressed many strong regrets at the misfortunes of that family. Moulton caught up some of these expressions, and wrote them down, saying that if Tilton could see them there would be no trouble in procuring a reconciliation. This paper, which is dated January 1st, 1871, was intrusted by Mr. Beecher to Moulton's keeping without reading it, nor was it read to him. This paper, sometimes called the apology, and sometimes the confession, is in no proper sense Mr. Beecher's production, or a correct report of what he said. For instance, no man will believe that Beecher said—"I humble myself before him, Tilton, as I do before my God." The sentence—"Her forgiveness I have," Mr. Beecher declares was not used nor the semblance of it. Pnusing here, a very important question arises in this connection, viz., 'to what does the apology refer?' It declares Mrs. Tilton guiltless, and yet Tilton says it refers to adultery, which Beecher denies.

All a Conspiracy.

The committee then proceed to take up the evidence to show that the original charge was improper advances, and that as time passed and the conspiracy deepened, it was enlarged into adultery. The importance of this is, they say, apparent, because if the charge has been so changed then both Tilton and Moulton are conspirators, and convicted of a vile fraud, which necessarily ends their influence in this controversy. The committee proceed to argue, at length, from the evidence already published, that this is a fact, and declare that the retraction and all subsequent conversations, acts and letters of the various persons directly concerned in dealing with the scandal are consistent with this view and with no other. The committee cite the true story written by Tilton, as containing the facts of the alleged offense of Beecher, and which they say he was in the habit of reading to newspaper men and others, as making no charge except that of improper or impure proposals by Beecher to Mrs. Tilton, and they quote the testimony of Beecher, Harmon and others to prove this statement. Beecher testifies that Tilton read this "true story" to him on a ferry boat one day, and that afterwards he went to Tilton's house and a conversation was had, which lasted till midnight, and during all this time not a word was said or hinted at by Tilton that he believed Beecher had committed adultery, but on the contrary he asserted his unshaken confidence in his wife's purity, and complained only of the improper solicitations. The committee say it is believed that no case of adultery on record can be produced where an injured husband, upon learning of his wife's infidelity, kept the fact to himself for six months, and then, after a private complaint to the offending party, received and accepted an apology for the offence, and declared it forgiven, and this followed by a restoration of the courtesies of friendship. The committee also argue that Moulton had in his mind no other offense than improper overtures by Beecher, and he did not believe or understand that it was adultery. They quote the expression in his letter to Beecher—"You can stand if the whole case were published to-morrow," and they decide the idea that he could write thus knowing that there was adultery in the case, and they conclude this branch of the case by branding the performance as a fraud, which ought to end all controversy as to the innocence of Mr. Beecher.
