The people on the sidewalk managed to get out of the way by the liveliest scrambling, but Mrs. E. A. Miller of west Fifth South street was struck and knocked down by the flying fragment of a shaft, and rendered unconscious. She was carried into Smith's drug store, where her needs were attended to and when it was found she was not seriously hurt she was sent home. The dumb elevator at the new city jail furnished the means for the es-cape of two prisoners yesterday. The men who took French leave are James Dougherty, doing thirty days for vag-rancy, and John Nolan, serving three months for petit larceny. The former was a trusty and had an easy chance to climb into the elevator shaft and lower himself to the kitchen. Once there, the rest was easy. He simply opened the window and departed. While Jailer Kimball was investigating the means of Dougherty's escape, Nolan asked "Uncle Sol" for a bath. Kimball unlocked the man's cell and permitted him to enter the bathroom. When all was quiet, Nolan let himself down the shaft, after breaking the door, and fled as Dougherty had done.
