Three Months of Freedom.

T. J. London, one of the American jubilee singers now in England, writes to the Pittsburg Gazette as follows:

I have never known practically the meaning of the word freedom in its highest sense but three months in my life, and though it is with shame for my own boasted and of freedom, yet it is true that three months have been spent in Great Britain.

And I now affirm that no black man, born and raised in the United States of America, can realize what it is to be absolutely free. And I further assert that no black man in America can realize what he suffers, and what a depressing and humiliating influence his manhood and higher nature is under, until he is able to rise above and breathe an atmosphere unobscured by the deadly and polluting poison of American prejudice. Think what it would be to be able to go to any hotel, restaurant, or confectionary, or any place of amusement, and not simply be able to make your way in at the point of some law, but to be absolutely welcomed, and better, but just the same as any other man who pays his money—and then not to be stuck away in some hole or corner, but some of the other customers may see you and become indignant because a "nigger" money pays for just the same as his does, and is just as gladly received! If it is possible just imagine what it is to be from home at most times, and without the slightest hesitation, walk into any restaurant or eating house, and get what you want without anyone to make you uncomfortable, and not be compelled to walk by half a dozen or more places in order to find some man who dares defy public opinion at the risk of his business by letting you have, in some secluded nook, what you want, and taking your money for it. If you go into a store for goods the clerks do not all suddenly get too busy to wait upon you, and cast a significant smile at the one who, after all, is compelled to wait for your money happens to be just as willing to wait on you as any one else, as if to say, "Ah! you have to wait on a nigger, as is every other man in America. If you waiters 'buss' and there is no American (I mean white), there is no one to draw up to her dress lest you black it, or turn up his nose or look scornful at you.
If for any reason you walk the streets with a white person of either sex, no one says, "Look at the nigger with a white person," or looks down at you as if he henceforth they are to be regarded as lepers. Perhaps some will say that this is because we are "Jubilee Singers." If we do not of course reply, I was a jubilee singer in America before I was in England.

How different was their treatment here. For three weeks they sang in one of Mr. Moody's meetings. A hall had been built for him in the east of London, with seatings for about 175 in all; we consisted of about one hundred persons. Santa was assigned to us in front and next to the stand.
Every member of the choir received us with the utmost kindness, and instead of trying to insult us, they tried in every conceivable way to make us feel welcome, and near the close of the series of meetings a tea was given for the stewards, officers, and choir, about 175 in all; we were invited. We spent an hour or more socially with them, because, then, promiscuously the ladies and gentlemen coupled themselves off, and arm in arm went into the tent to partake of the sumptuous repast provided for them. No two of the jubilee sat together, and no one was there on the ground of other way to make us feel unwelcome. We were simply treated as any other guests who had been invited to the entertainment.

We stopped one day in London, at a fine, private boarding house in Queen's square. While we were there, or rather the day we were there (for we were out at the time when I now speak), a man from Indiana came there and engaged board for himself and family. He sent his luggage and was to come himself the next day. But when they came the next morning we were just throwing away the trash, visions, and of course, all in the house. They walked in and saw us and walked out and left us with two dollars and a half for the traps. The landlady did not know what to think of such conduct. We knew, but for our country's sake we were ashamed to tell her. But had they known it they need not have gone, for we left in a couple of hours ourselves.

On reaching the station (or depot, as you call it), we saw a tall man and woman, whom we suspected of being Americans. Soon our suspicions were confirmed when we saw them looking after some ponderous trunks marked "U. S. A." We resolved to have some fun at our friend, brother and fellow-citizen's expense.
So, as there are eleven of us, we could pretty well have one in each of the first-class compartments of the train, and the last I saw of our good Kentucky brother, he was hurriedly passing from one compartment to another, evidently looking for a first-class compartment without an "internal nigger." Whether he succeeded or not I am unable to say, but I know we got to Edinburgh "just the same," and we stopped at the Regent Hotel, a first-class temperance hotel, where may be seen floating from the flagstaff the stars and stripes in honor of our presence. Some of our fellow-countrymen, of whom there are many in the city, feel like tearing it down, when they come to learn for whom it is hoisted, and find that it is to do honor to me.
