

LAST RACE MEET THIS AFTERNOON.

Plenty of Unexpected Features to Yesterday's Program at The Fair.

SOME SENSATIONAL FINISHES.

Four Lively Events Scheduled for Enertainment of Fans Today—A New Style of Going.

This afternoon's races at Agricultural park track will be the last of this year's series for the state fair. Today's program embraces four interesting events, and the entertainment should be the best of the week.

Yesterday afternoon's program was a thriller. If any individual who saw the various events pulled off at the track was not satisfied, or felt that he did not get the worth of his money, that person is decidedly hard to please.

There were many unusual features to yesterday's meet, many of them not being pre-arranged. For instance, who would have thought to see Hal Brown among the jockeys? Who expected to see a horse that trotted with his front feet and galloped with his hind feet? Then, as the last race was being run, there was a runaway that smashed into the carriage along the track, and this furnished a little more excitement.

But perhaps the most amusing thing was the style of going possessed by the animal referred to above. The horse trotted in a peculiar way, and he was called a "trotter." In the free-for-all trot this peculiar animal gave Dr. Frazee a light show for first honors, but the animal with the M. D. attachment, finally got away with the goods. The first heat was a fast one and was captured by the horse with the combination trot-run gait.

The circus stunts by Hal Brown was worth double the price of admission. The second heat of the 220 class event, Brown's rain snapped and his horse proceeded to run away. Around the track he flew and the spectators held their breath, expecting every second to see a smash-up. But Brown calmly climbed on the animal's back, took hold of the reins and finally managed to control the frightened horse. Brown was cheered loudly by the crowd.

The three-quarter mile dash brought out a surprise when Argot beat Sissenevine. The latter was placed in a pocket and had to stay there.

'VARSITY TEAM PRACTISE.

Great Improvement shown in Individual Work—Boys Are Confident.

There is justification for the belief that the University team will yet be whipped into winning shape by Coach Maddock, for in a practise game with All Hallows yesterday, they played vastly different from the game they put up with Colorado. Bennion was able to boot the ball for a distance three times, and Wade was sure on his tackles—the two places where the university team let Colorado through so easily Saturday last. The line was able to hold. Maddock's system of defense was not thrown away and the old single line defense substituted at the first exciting scrimmage. The ends played their positions better, and it is safe to say that it will be a fine play who is able to skirt around Russell and Anderson in the future. Coach Maddock claims to have in them a pair of the finest ends in the country, and he is getting them up into a shape that proves it.

In the practise game yesterday Maddock got into the game displacing Bennion at full. In two downs he had plowed through the line for a touchdown. Milner was not tried at half, although he is proving himself the toughest little fighter in the team when it comes to advancing the ball under difficulties. The line up:

MAY CHANGE RULES.
Claimed That Ball Games Are Becoming Entirely Too Mechanical.

The coming winter will see some changes in the rules of baseball in all probability. Either the abolition of the foul strike or the invention of some rule to offset it by handicapping the pitcher is a practical necessity. The game is to continue its prosperous career. With the pitcher in the role of absolute monarch, the action of the game has become largely mechanical, so far as the average spectator is concerned. The game is fought and won by skill and science, which is lost to the general public because so much of it is confined to the curves and other wiles of the pitcher, on whom depends pretty nearly the whole game. There is not enough batting or base running to allow for the exhibition of much science by the other eight players in the attacking side of the sport.
The share of public honor is confined to an occasional chance to make a brilliant fielding play. A large proportion of the games played nowadays shows scores in which the total runs for both teams will be not more than five. The team which is fortunate enough to bag a couple of runs or more in the first inning has the game practically won. The element of surprise and uncertainty is minimized. This is particularly true in the American league where the teams are more evenly matched in pitching strength than in the National. The American league does not seem to be short of the foul strike and perhaps further handicapping the pitcher by compelling him to use fewer motions in delivering the ball.
The National league does not seem to be short of the foul strike and perhaps further handi-capping the pitcher by compelling him to use fewer motions in delivering the ball. The National league does not seem to be short of the foul strike and perhaps further handi-capping the pitcher by compelling him to use fewer motions in delivering the ball. The National league does not seem to be short handi-capping the pitcher by compelling him to use fewer motions in delivering the ball. The National league does not
