smart set in London society, are be-stowing much attention at the moment on a young man who has just left Eton and is preparing for a military career. The youth in question is the son of Maj.Gen. Hugh McCalmont and in two years from now he will be the wealth-iest officer in the British army. He is the godson of King Edward, and inher-its the wealth of his uncle who died the godson of King Edward, and inher-its the wealth of his uncle who died with tragic suddenness about three years ago. There can be no question of his marrying for dollars because on attaining his majority he will be a millionaire in pounds several times over. Needless to say he is the reci-pient of even more attention from aristocratic British matrons with daughters who will soon be of a mar-riageable age. A friend in India vouches for the truth of this story of the late viceroy's travels in India. On arriving in one of the mative states Lord Curzon caused an intimation to be conveyed to the Rajan that it would accord him great pleasure to shoot a bear. It happened that there were no bears in that part pleasure to shoot a bear. It happened that there were no bears in that part of India, but the Rajah, with true oriental hospitality, declared to his staff that the great viceroy's wish should be gratified at whatever cost. The Rajah sent to the zoological gar-dens in his capital and borrowed a bear. He had the beast driven to the lungle He had the heast driven to the jungle. Next day the hunt was organized and native beaters fixed things so that the viceroy would get a shot at the bear. He fired twice, but missed each time. He fired twice, but missed each time. The bear was recaptured and restored to the local zoo. The wily Rajah knew that Lord Curzon was a bad shot, but he did not trust to that alone to save the bear. While Lord Curzon was en-joying a sumptuous feast, he "fixed" Lord Curzon's gun so that at a hun-dred yards it would have missed a barn door. LADY MARY.

On his deathbed even, the remorseless old man drove Victor from his room, shouting, "No, no, get back to Paris—enough!" enough!" But from time to time, with tears in his eyes and in tones of an-guish, he demanded his second son, his beloved Louis, sighling "Will he ar-rive in time? Shall I still have strength to recognize and speak to him?" By his will he declared Louis to be his heir. But the will had no political efhis elder otocan, ing what the future may bring forth, ing what the future may bring forth, Victor's increasing unpopularity with the rank and file of the Bonapartists may force Louis to take the leadership. When their aunt, Princess Mathilds, died it was to Louis she left her for-tune, because, it is said, she recarded Victor as an ir $$ istibility and consid-ered Louis the sole hope of the Bona-partists. THIS PREACHER HIS OWN BUILDER.

THIS PREACHER HIS OWN BUILDER. The preacher, business man, real es-tate operator, financier, architect, con-tractor, builder, fireman and laborer arc all combined in the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Tyndail, pastor of the People's Tab-ernacle of New York. It is a strenu-ous gospel the minister is preaching and practising before his congregation -one of Christianity, enthusiasm, in-dustry and the dignity of labor. T. Tyndail has undertaken the erec-tion of a six-story home for working girls, and for eight or nine hours out of every working day the minister may be found in overalls and jumper upon the fourth story, directing a score of men in the work of building the waise. exclusion law as administered, says that there would be no abatement of the boycott in China against American goods until the desired change is made. Everywhere merchants and their cus-tomers are working together to shut out goods made in the United States. At Tientsin, Dr. Tong asserted, mills for the production of cotton and woollen goods have been started, and a flour mill is in operation. These are the first mills of the kind, he said, ever run in China, and capitalists there are com-ing to the front with funds to in-crease the number.

not gratified. In a subordinate position he would have stood no chance to win hattles. Sharing in the defeats of the Russian armies would hardly have en-hanced his military reputation. On the Russian side the war has produced only dead heroes.

A RUSSIAN PRINCESS.

A RUSSIAN PRINCESS. At one time it was hoped by the Bonspartists that Prince Louis would marry a Russian princess. Such an al-liance would greatly strengthen his chances of some day figuring as the leader of the imperialist cause. A few years ago several papers published the report that he had become engaged to the Princess Helene, daughter of the Grand Duke Vladimir and first cousin of the czar. A few journals even went so far as to declare that a secret mar-riage had taken place between them. Both rumors proved incorrect. The prince is still a bachelor. The marriage question is for him a rather difficult one. Royal parents who are frienily disposed toward him naturally fight shy of the idea of making him a son-in-law of the idea of making him a son-in-law of the idea of making him a son-in-law because of the political complications that such a step would involve. So far as blue blood goes he would be no bad match. Though the house of Bona-parte, as everybody knows, took its rise from the son of a second rate Cor-sican lawyer. Louis can still boast many kingly forefathers through his mother. Princess Clotide of Cavoy, and his father's mother, a princess of Wurtem-berg. ALL SPEAK WELL OF HIM.

Everybody who has been brought in-Everybody who has been brought in-to contact with Prince Louis speaks well of him. Some five feet eight inches in height, black bearded and keen-eyed, physically he is well fitted for the role of a soldier. He does not bear the least resemblance to the great Vanoleon, but more resemblances do bear the least resemblance to the great Napoleon, but mere resemblances do not count for much, and so far as in-dicating similarity of tailents and char-acter goes likenesses are notoriously untrustworthy guides. "Flon-Flon," the father of Victor and Louis and the son of Jerome. King of Westphalla, bore a most striking likeness to his uncle, Napoleon I, but he possessed none of his genius and was a thorough-ly bad lot. He made his wife's life at the sumptuous Palais Royal one long, martyrdom. He managed to win the undisguised hatred of those who polit-ically held the same views as himself. ically held the same views as himself. He so far alienated the affections of his eldest son! Victor, that the latter on attaining his majority, assumed the leadership of the Imperialists and was followed by the bulk of the party. "Plon-Plon," when seized with his last lliness, denounced him as a rebel and

ANDY FIELDS OF HOUSE OF MIRTH FAME.

This is the only photograph known to be in existence of Andrew C. Fields, the missing legislative agent of the Mutual Life. The Armstrong committee would rather examine Fields than any other man in the country connected with the life insurance business. They have given up all hope, however, of finding him.

The officers of the Mutual Life conducted a make-believe search for Fields, and to give an air of sincerity to their work sent a special emissary to California to hunt the Pacific coast for the missing man. At the time this messenger started Fields is supposed to be in Canada.

Fields was the originator of the Houes of Mirth at Albany. He is a devout Methodist, never drinks, smokes or dissipates in any way, and in his social life is a model. He is generally credited, however, with knowing more about the dark side of life insurance than any other man in the States.

PROF. OSLER WITH US FOR A SHORT TIME.

Prof, William Osler, now of Oxford University, formerly of John Hopkins, whose jocular remark about chloroforming all men of 60 years caused such a sensation, arrived from England Sunday, Dec. 24. He was not in a very good humor when he landed. Dr. Osler refused to look at newspaper clippings telling of men who had committed suicide, leaving their hats with the chloroform statement pasted in. He will lecture later at Johns Hopkins University.
