THAT FOUNDLING

The principals and ablers and abetters in a matter of this kind are un-natural and criminal in their con-duct. As a matter of course the chief object of the inbressed parties is to preserve the strictest secrecy as to the blendification of the parents and other family connections of the founding. In order to further this object, a note was placed with the poor neglected little one, giving a description of the mether, of the man who produced for full, and man who produced her fall, and sating the alleged fact of his de-parture for other peris. The writ-ing-even went to far as to defineate the social standing of the grand-parents of the deserted little chap.

All of this array of fabschood was not only wiched, but absolutely ridiculous. Who is so this brained acto take as remains a description venue whose chief object is to prevent a disclosure of their identity
