Dr. FOOTE, Senior,

Of 120 Lexington Avenue, New York,

Hereby cautions the public NOT to Employ or Communicate With "a man styling himself "Dr. Foot, Jr." without making due inquiry.

This man came to Salt Lake City representing himself as the son of Dr. E. B. FOOTE of New York, the well known specialist, as abundantly proved by affidavits. As rumors came into Salt Lake City from Dakota and Montana from an expose made there, he changed his base and represented himself as the son of a more noted specialist in New York City than Dr. E. B. FOOTE, the well known author. Mr. JOHN F. TROW, of the well known Trow's Directory, in New York City (forty years in the directory business), Ex-Governor FRANK FULLER, of Utah, and the Hon. ABRAM WAKEMAN, for many years Postmaster in New York City, also Surveyor of the Port, gave their affidavits that there are no other doctors in New York by the name of FOOTE or FOOTE, excepting Dr. E. B. FOOTE, the author of "Medical Common Sense," etc., and his two sons, Dr. E. B. FOOTE, Jr., and Dr. HERBERT T. FOOTE. The genuine Dr. FOOTE, Jr., will hereafter always employ the initials, E. B., in designating his name. Heretofore he has been known not only at home but wherever his publications have been circulated, by the name of Dr. FOOTE, Jr. Greater care will be taken hereafter, in view of the fact that an unprincipled person has assumed to profit by his and his father's reputation.

Those desiring further and more detailed information in respect to this matter, will receive it by addressing Box 414, Salt Lake City Utah.

Persons having information of advantage to plaintiffs will kindly communicate the same to J. W. Ivey, with Sutherland & McBride, Salt Lake City.

Those desiring to consult Dr. FOOTE professionally or to order remedies should address either

Dr. E. B. FOOTE, Sr., or Dr. E. B. FOOTE, Jr.,

120 Lexington Ave., New York.

Consultation Free, in person or by letter. d&n 1m6

EVENING NEWS.

COMMON SENSE FOR THE TABLE.

There is a great deal of use for common sense in this life and there is no place or situation where it can be used to greater advantage than in the culinary department. We can not stay in this world long without nourishment of some kind. Dr. Tanner and other cranks have tried it, but they soon fall back among the solid ranks that eat to live. Most people enjoy this order of things, and many take such pride in it, that they act as though they lived especially for that purpose.

The babe that receives the nourishment is the one that has the surest chance to reach an older growth; so the man or woman who is most properly fed, is the one who has most reason to hope for a well ripened age, if not given to other abuses of the body. The recklessness that people display in cramming their stomachs is something both wonderful and fearful; and thoughtlessness of many housekeepers in placing ill assorted jumbles of food upon their tables is enough to usher entire families prematurely into Paradise.

Instinct in a measure settles the question of what we should eat. Who relish a heavy dinner of roast beef, plum pudding and mince pie as well in the summer heat as they do in winter? This is evidence that nature demands lighter food, such as fruits, vegetables, light desserts, etc., during the heated term, while richer sauces and meats may be used in cold weather.

The taste rebels against sour bread, and what is this but nature teaching us to beware of it? So of rum and tobacco, the novice rarely finds pleasure in their use, but goes on madly thinking he can conquer the higher law and establish a natural condition of his own to suit an acquired habit. The effort is vain, and only results in damage to him who undertakes it. A grand old teacher is Mother Nature. The stomach revolts at the mere thought of fermented fruits, tainted meats, stale pies and cakes and such, and such and yet women often put such things on their tables to keep them from being wasted. (?) It is an ill wind that blows nobody good, and this kind of economy furnishes employment for the doctor and patent medicine man; but common sense would dictate that such things be given to the pigs; nature has given them stomachs that require acid and fermented food, but we do not belong to the lop eared variety of animals, and cannot thrive on what affords them excellent sustenance.

There are few people but have a keen relish for fresh, ripe, seasonable fruits, and they damage no one when eaten in moderation and at the proper times. Even harmless things must be partaken of in a harmless way; yet there are housekeepers who devote unnumbered hours to canning and spicing choice fruit for future use, while on the tables will be found the ferment of some last year's jar, not in first-class condition, but must be eaten to be saved; so the fresh fruit is stored away to be kept till it too has lost its acridness and aroma. Good women, this won't do. When will you learn to quit preserving more than you need? I once took tea at a place where canned fruit was on the table and a basket of ripe peaches in the house waiting to be canned next day. "Thrift, thrift, Horatio!"

Henry Simpson, M. D., of the Manchester Royal Infirmary, in a lecture delivered before the sanitary association of that city says: "Without proper care of the body the cultivation of the intellect is of little use; and you should remember that nothing is more valuable to your daughter than a knowledge of simple, economical methods of preparing food, so it shall be wholesome and pleasant; and help to build up a sound body—the best casket for a sound mind."

It does not require deep or profound study to know how to cook good nutritious food; but it does require a lavish use of common sense to know how to get them on the table in order, and to diversify the bill of fare, and keep up an appetizing variety. One can not stand for a housekeeper of the first order, without knowing which meats blend with which vegetables, what dishes are best for breakfast, and what for tea—to neither surfeit with over much, or stint with too little.

While men are studying business matters, and how to make money, women should make the welfare of the family their peculiar care, and study to devise plans and a way of economical cooking and living that will add to the health and pleasure of all. This makes woman truly a helpmeet—this is why she was made. We were in no part of the original plan, but man had not enough "go" in him to keep from starving, and so Nature brought her last best finished work (Ahem!) to the rescue, to stir him around. Let us be faithful to our work.—Mary Sidney in Farm Journal.

ARSENIC AND OPIUM EATING.

Time out of mind the theme of opium smoking and eating, as well as that of morphine eating, has been discussed in medical and other circles, but of late years a new and greater evil has arisen. It is arsenic eating.

Yesterday a New York Telegraph reporter sat in the prescription room of a Broadway drug store. A woman entered and whispered something in the drug clerk's ear. She was a gorgeously dressed and splendidly formed woman, and her face was beautiful in its clear, almost transparent color, but under the eyes were dark circles, which might be mistaken for headache, dissipation, or anything but the real cause. The clerk went into the back part of the store and soon came back with two pieces of meat, with which he proceeded to make a sandwich by putting in a layer of green stuff out of a tin box. This he informed the reporter, was arsenic. The sandwich was given the lady in exchange for a bill and she departed, smiling her thanks.

"What is she going to do with that?" asked the reporter.

"Poison rats," replied the druggist, with a smile.

"Do many people use arsenic for poisoning rats?"

"Oh, you reporters are awful dull," responded the clerk. "Do you suppose a society lady like the one just gone would come here and pay me a dollar for a little arsenic if she wanted it for rats? She wants to eat that arsenic. We dare not sell arsenic without a physician's prescription, unless in the form I just gave it to that lady, and that gives me a legal excuse—it is to poison rats, you know."

VICTIMS OF VANITY.

"Do many women call for it?"

"Why, there are more women in New York—society ladies, too — who are poisoning themselves with arsenic than any one dreams of. I have nearly a hundred regular customers for my arsenic sandwiches. They scrape the arsenic off the meat and eat it as freely as some do opium."

"How does it affect them?"

"It does not have any of the intoxicating effects of opium. They eat it to beautify their complexions. That clear, beautiful skin the woman just here had is the result of a year's use of the drug. For a year after taking it the unprofessional person cannot notice the effects of the poison. He sees simply a beautiful complexion, clear enough to trace the blue veins in it, and the owner is called beautiful. This is gratifying to her vanity, and she is willing to sacrifice health and happiness for a few short years of beauty and flattery. Then she fades, for arsenic makes a woman grow old before her time. In a few years the woman who was just here will be haggard and faded, and will drop out of the social world, but this will not deter other women from following in her footsteps. After a year the use of arsenic can be easily detected, especially in the sunlight. The skin is transparent and around the eyes there is a shading like indigo. The whites of the eyes assume a peculiar yellowish appearance and the pupils are much dilated. Then follows illness, and very soon death."

SLAVES OF KING OPIUM.

The great rival of arsenic is opium. The daily papers have for several years been deluged with sensational accounts of opium smoking. In no account has the reclamation of a victim from the terrible habit been chronicled. Instances are, indeed, few and far between where the slave of the opium habit has shaken its grasp from him. Out of all the large army of smokers in New York, which now mounts up into the thousands, but one "old smoker" has renounced the practice, and a trouble of the heart threatened him with death before he ceased. Heeding his physicians, he commenced a struggle which lasted three months, and finally won the victory. Instead of a shuming, whitefaced, nervous, and prematurely bent man, he walks with the elasticity of youth and his cheeks are red with the glow of health.

To the Daily Telegraph reporter he told how he commenced and ended his battle with the drug. "I tried all the so-called opium cure specialists," said he, "but without success; their nostrums did me no good, for when I discontinued the use of their susbtitutes the old craving became as strong as ever. I tried several regular practitioners, with the same result, and then in despair went to an old doctor. He looked at me pityingly and told me that my only hope was in exerting my will power. I then returned home and told my wife of my determination. She prayed that my will would carry me through, and I went to bed.

AGONIES OF THE LOST.

The first and second days my sufferings were slight, but upon the third day my joints swelled and my limbs ached. On the fourth day my very bones felt as if red-hot needles were darting through them. My body was racked with such great pain that I would have given up in despair had it not been for the patient face beside me. I became partially delirous and a high fever set in. A reeking perspiration broke from me, and I fell away from 190 to 110 pounds. A word spoken in a whisper sounded like the explosion of artillery and the ringing of the fire engine gongs filled me with untold agony. I grew weaker and weaker in the day, and a physician who was called to my bedside said I could not live unless I returned to the use of opium or a substitute. I closed my eyes, and deciding that death was preferable to such slavery as I had been subjected to, dismissed the medical adviser. The next day after his visit there was a slight reaction in my favor. I began to drink wine to strengthen me, and after a siege of three months I emerged to the world a free man, filled with wonder that I could have ever fallen so low. My wife is also a changed creature, and we have now a comfortable home."

The Transportation of Gas.

Thirty miles of pipe line will soon be ready for use to convey natural gas from wells located near Sheffield, Warren County, Pa., to Jamestown, Chautauqua County, N. Y. The pipe used is mainly what is called eight-inch pipe, though a part of it is still larger, laid in a trench about two feet deep. Thirty-five miles of smaller service pipe has been laid in the streets of Jamestown, and it is expected by Nov. 1st to supply gas as desired at that place for manufacturing and domestic purposes. Gasometers are constructed for the purpose of receiving the gas and regulating the pressure. It is expected that the initial force at the point of supply will be sufficient for the delivery of the gas, without mechanical assistance, 30 miles distant. This part of the problem will be a matter of no little interest. The transportation of gas, if it can be cheaply and continuously effected for considerable distances, will do away with a large amount of coal transportation. In fact, the time may come when coal will be turned into gas at the mines, and its valuable combustible quality only transmitted. The cost of the Jamestown plant is estimated not to exceed $200,000.—Phila. Record.
