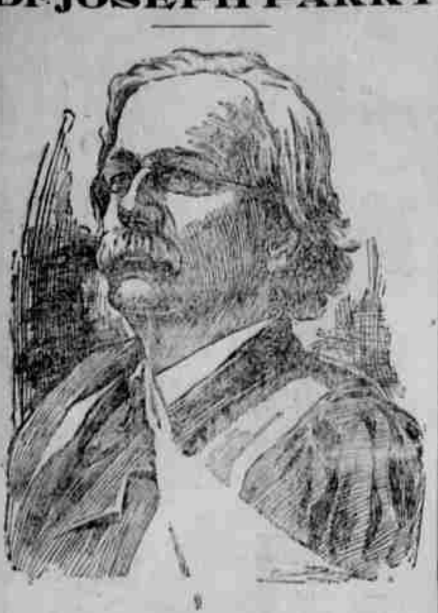
Dr. JOSEPH PARRY



A Committee of the Cambrain Association Escorts Him to His Hotel.

Dr. Joseph Parry, the eminent Welsh musician and critic of Cardiff, South Wales, arrived at the Rio Grande depot in this city at 2:45 this afternoon. A committee of representative Welshmen, including ex-Gov. Thomas, Prof. Evan Stephens, T. F. Thomas, W. N. Williams, H. F. Evans, D. L. Davis and Willie J. Lewis, met the famous adjudicator and extended to him a warm welcome. Dr. Parry looked some the worse for the long journey. After mutual congratulations the entire party drove to the Knutsford, where the doctor will maintain his headquarters until after the Eisteddfod has become an event of the past.

A COMMENDABLE EVENT.

The Dedication of a Relief Society Granary at Mill Creek.

To the Editor:

The Relief Society of Mill Creek ward, this county, have just completed a substantial wheat bin with the capacity of 1,500 bushels, at a cost of about $200. The bin is situated at Bishop James C. Hamilton's.

The members of the Relief Society, their husbands, the officers of the Young Men's and the Young Ladies' associations, also Bishop John R. Winder and wife and Patriarch Alexander Hill were invited to assemble and dedicate the same last Tuesday. Bishop Hamilton placed his fine residence and grounds at the disposal of the society and the following program was rendered:

The choir, under the leadership of Brother Howard M. Horne, sang "Praise Ye the Lord." Prayer was offered by Patriarch Hill. Another song was rendered by the choir and an essay on wheat was read by Secretary Frances H. Hanson. Brother Edward White sang a song.

Those present then repaired to the bin, and as many as wished inspected the same. Bishop John R. Winder then offered the dedicatory prayer. It was a very imposing ceremony, and all seemed to feel that it was a step in the right direction. The audience returned to the lawn and the choir sang, "We have thought of Thy Kindness." Counselor Mary B. Hamilton recited a selection, "The Curse of the Drum Shop." Sister Sarah F. Bodon sang, "Do They Miss Me at Home." Counselor J. H. Miller, Brother H. M. Horne, Bishop J. R. Winder and Bishop J. C. Hamilton each spoke in reference to the storing of grain by the Relief Society. President Hannah Hill, in a few chosen words, thanked all those who have assisted in making the undertaking a success. One hundred and thirty persons then sat down to one long table arranged across the lawn, and loaded down with the bounties of the earth. The young ladies who acted as waitresses, also the committee on arrangements deserve special mention. After supper, there was music and singing. It was an occasion long to be remembered, and the spirit which prevailed caused all to return home well satisfied with the day's proceedings.

MINOR MENTION.

Mr. and Mrs. John Smythe, members of the Denver Choral Society, are in the city.

Louis Vivian, the 1-year-old son of Prof. Willard Done, sustained a severe and painful injury to his right eye last evening by being accidentally struck with a willow switch in the hand of an older brother. [illegible] and today was badly swollen. The sufferer is under the treatment of Dr. Wilcox.

AMUSEMENTS.

Henry Miller and his excellent company of players will present the romantic drama, Heartsease, at the Salt Lake Theater tonight. Mr. Miller is a prime favorite here and his engagement of three nights and Wednesday matinee bids fair to be a record breaker. The play tonight is a romantic drama of the seventeenth century and one particularly suited to Mr. Miller's abilities. Tomorrow night The Master will be the bill, with a repetition of Heartsease for the matinee on Wednesday afternoon and A Marriage of Convenience to close the engagement with on Wednesday night.

Hoyt's A Milk White Flag comes to the Theater next Thursday night, remaining for one night only. The reason for a one night engagement was due to the fact that dates which the Theater could be had were not suitable to the company and vice versa, with the result that the company steals a night from another engagement to appear here. Those who saw the Flag will remember it as a clever travesty on the citizen soldiery and will be glad of the opportunity to hear the catchy music and its other interesting features again.

A young lady from the southern part of the State attended the funeral services at the Tabernacle over the remains of President Woodruff and was so much affected with the funeral march composed for that occasion by Prof. Daynes that she could not dismiss it from her mind. She was taken ill a few days ago and died and her request was that this composition be rendered at her funeral and the request was complied with.

Railroad Notes.

H. B. Koser, general agent of the Missouri Pacific railroad, returned this morning from a two weeks' visit to his old home in Pennsylvania. He also visited Omaha while east and spent a day at the Transmississippi exposition. He speaks very highly of the Utah exhibit, and says that no Utahn need be ashamed of the showing his State is making. He states that all the eastern railroads are looking forward to a great business this fall.

Traveling Freight Agent Bradley of the Midland spent Sunday in this city.

At the general freight office of the Oregon Short Line it is learned that a great many shipments of goods have been made to the Idaho state fair at Boise City, and that the success of the exhibition is assured.

Orvis Morris, the newly appointed general traveling agent of the Oregon Short Line, has gone on his first trip south.

Mr. Bancroft, General Freight Agent of the Oregon Short Line, went north this morning.

WON HIS MEN.

Daring Act of a Second Lieutenant Under Fire.

New York Sun: What every officer of regulars does if he is or intends to become an efficient leader on the field of battle, is to attempt to win the confidence and respect of his men. He cultivates [illegible] well acquainted with their personal peculiarities, and he studies how to instill into them that spirit which, having no equivalent for it, we will call esprit de corps. A captain usually has plenty of opportunity for this, the other company officers not quite so much, and it sometimes happens that a lieutenant finds himself suddenly in command of a company which has been somewhat demoralized by the loss of the man to whose leadership it has become accustomed. Then is the time when he must act swiftly and firmly if he would avoid disaster. Such a crisis came to Lieutenant Newell, second lieutenant of Company A, Twenty-second Infantry, at El Caney, and the chestnut war reminiscence of his men is how he came out of it. The firing had been sharp where they stood, and early in the fight the captain and the first lieutenant fell, leaving command to Lieutenant Newell, who is a young Southerner. His men were nervous and disheartened by their losses, and their commander saw that unless he got them in hand soon there would be some happenings that would not look well in the reports. Some of his men were out ahead skirmishing, and one of them, a man who was popular in the company, fell. The lieutenant ordered his men forward to get the wounded soldier. They stood still. Again he ordered them, but they did not obey. Turning to a sergeant whom he implicitly trusted, Lieutenant Newell said quietly:

"Sergeant, I want you to go out with me to get that wounded man."

"Yes, sir," said the sergeant, saluting.

The company stood and watched them go forward. At the first glance the lieutenant saw that the soldier could not live more than a few minutes. He groaned out a request to be taken back to the lines to die.

"All right," said the officer, "we'll take you in a minute. Just lie quiet, and I'll stay with you."

In two minutes, during which time Lieutenant Newell and his sergeant stood there under fire, the soldier died. Then the two went back to the lines. Nothing was said between the company and the officer, who had just proved himself, but the nervous wavering of the line was over. The men stood like rocks, and when the order came to advance they went forward with a cheer. In three minutes they had passed the line that separates the tyro from the veteran.

"That ain't in the book, sir," said the soldier who told this incident to the writer, "but it's the sort of thing that wins [illegible] that wins battles."

WEALTH OF STATES.

The Richest in Proportion to Population—Statistics of Church-goers.

[Rene Bache in Hartford Times.]

New York state owns one-eighth of the entire wealth of the country. Pennsylvania follows with about one-tenth, and Illinois comes next with about a twelfth of the riches of the United States. The richest states in proportion to population, however, are those of the far West, while the poorest are those of the far South. In other words, the average citizen of the far West is better off, while he of the South is most impoverished. In Nevada the average human inhabitant owns $2,320 worth of real estate and improvements; in Arizona he possesses $1,600 worth; in Montana, Wyoming and Washington he has only a little less. In New York he has nearly $1,000 worth, and in Massachusetts he possesses a little over $800 in this shape. In the Gulf states and the Carolinas he comes down to $200 worth or less.

Nearly one-third of the church-goers of the United States are Roman Catholics. Considerably more than one-fifth are Methodists. More than one-sixth are Baptists. One church-goer in sixteen is a Presbyterian, and one in seventeen a Lutheran. One in thirty-nine is an Episcopalian, and one in thirty-nine a Congregationalist. The balance of the church-going people is split up into minor sects. New Mexico is almost wholly Roman Catholic. Arizona is three-quarters Catholic; Massachusetts, Wyoming and Nevada are two-thirds Catholic; Connecticut, Colorado and California are half Catholic. Methodists are strongest in Delaware, South Carolina and Florida, numbering 50 per cent of the church-goers. Baptists are most numerous in Mississippi, Georgia and Virginia, claiming 50 per cent and upwards in those states. Twelve in every thirteen religious people in Utah profess the Mormon faith, two in three are Mormons in Idaho, and one in eleven in Nevada.

New Mexico is the most pious section of the Union, with 65 per cent of its population church communicants. Utah comes next with 62 per cent, for Mormons are first-rate church-goers. Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Connecticut are high up on the list, with over 40 per cent, but Vermont falls much below, and New Hampshire has a record of only 21 per cent. Maine drops below 20 per cent. The really heathen states, however, are those of the far West, where the percentage of church-goers drops off to a lamentably small fraction.

DORA AND AGNES.

Suggestion About Two Women in "David Copperfield."

[Jerome K. Jerome's New Book.]

"The woman David Copperfield wanted was Agnes and Dora rolled into one. He had to take them one after the other, which was not so nice. And did he really love Agnes, Mr. Dickens, or merely feel he ought to? Forgive me, but I am doubtful concerning that second marriage of Copperfield. Come, strictly between ourselves, Mr. Dickens, was not David, good human soul, now and again a wee bit bored by the immaculate Agnes? She made him an excellent wife, I am sure. She never ordered oysters by the barrel, unopened. It would, on any day, have been safe to ask Traddles home to dinner; in fact, Sophy and the whole [illegible] might have accompanied him; Agnes would have been equal to the occasion. The dinner would have been perfectly cooked and served, and Agnes's sweet smile would have pervaded the meal. But after the dinner, when David and Traddles sat smoking alone, while from the drawing-room drifted down notes of high-class, elevating music, played by the saintly Agnes, did they never, glancing covertly toward the empty chair between them, see the laughing curl-framed face of a very foolish little woman—one of those foolish little women that a wise man thanks God for making—and wish, in spite of all, that it were flesh and blood, not shadow.

"Oh, you foolish wise folk, who would remodel human nature! Cannot you see how great is the work given unto childish hands? Think you that in well-ordered housekeeping and high-class conversation lies the whole making of a man? Foolish Dora, fashioned by clever old mother nature, who knows that weakness and helplessness are as a talisman calling forth strength and tenderness in man, trouble yourself not unduly about those oysters nor the underdone mutton, little woman. Good plain cooks at twenty pounds a year will see to these things for us, and now and then, when a windfall comes our way we will dine together at a moderate price restaurant, where these things are managed even better. Your work, dear, is to teach us gentleness and kindliness. Foolish wise folk sneer at you; foolish wise folk would pull up the useless lilies, the needless roses, from the garden, would plant in their places only serviceable, wholesome cabbages. But God, knowing better, plants silly, short-lived flowers; foolish wise folk ask for what purpose."

OBITUARY.

HULDA BARNES KIMBALL.

Holden, Millard County, Sept. 26, 1898.—The mortal spirit of "Aunt Hulda" Barnes Kimball silently stole away at 4 o'clock today.

"Aunt Hulda," as she was called, was born in Berkshire county, Mass., and would have been 89 years old on October 1, 1898. She had six brothers and two sisters. Hulda Barnes joined the Church in Pennsylvania, and went to Kirtland, Ohio, where she lived at the home of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

She came to Nauvoo in 1841, and was there sealed to Heber C. Kimball. She arrived in Salt Lake City in 1852, and for many years was employed as a school teacher there and at Farmington, and other places. For several years she has been very deaf, but her eyesight was so good that she could tear a letter open in the postoffice and read it without glasses. A freshly written letter is now in her room, which she intended to mail today. Her memory was good and she enjoyed a little pleasantry. A short time since Ab Kimball called to shake hands with her and upon writing down his name she took another grip and said, "Is this you, Albert? Well then, you are the boy when at my school and I was going to whip a smaller one, stepped up and said, 'Here, lick me instead of the smaller boy.'" "Aunt Hulda" has resided here for a number of years, and has been cared for by the Harmon family. Of late years she has received spiritualistic literature from the East, which disturbed her previous peaceful mind, and she feared the thought of death. She ate a hearty dinner today, and afterwards started to go to the postoffice. Brother Harmon told her she need not go, he himself would go if required. She entered her room after taking a drink of water, and sat near the door on an ordinary small chair. A cup of water was on a stand at her elbow, and she appeared to be enjoying her usual cogitations, and fifteen minutes after she had replied to Ansel as he passed a little girl discovered that she was dead, and that they found "Aunt Hulda" sitting upright in an armless chair. Her cane was in her left hand, and a sprig of a plumb tree in her right hand had ceased to wave the flies away. Her head was bowed as in a dreamful doze. The joy and fear from "Aunt Hulda" had gone like a passing thought, and the remains still sat there until the Bishop and others were called in and prepared a more convenient place of repose.

She will be buried tomorrow.
