

THE EVENING NEWS.

PUBLISHED DAILY, SUNDAY RECEIVED AT FOUR O'CLOCK.

GEORGE Q. CANNON,
BRIGHAM YOUNG,
EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1872.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We publish, this evening, the concluding portion of the President's message. There is nothing startling in the document, but altogether it is sound, dispassionate, and seasoned with common sense. The absence of any allusion to Utah, after the big sport made to force it upon his notice, causes great chagrin and disgust to the rampant anti-polygamists.

Wisconsin pays a bounty of $5 for wolf scalps, and last year the State put out over $16,000 in that way. The wolves are increasing in number and it has been noted that at present prices it pays better to raise wolves than sheep. Wolves breed fast and do not require very careful keeping in order to grow a scalp. Perhaps Wisconsin would do well to change the bounty and pay something for handsome sheep. The farmers would speedily take care of the wolves.

The Thanksgiving number of the New York Christian Union will contain a stirring letter from Secretary Sherman on the South Carolina troubles; a breezy article by Gall Hamilton; a Star Paper from Henry Ward Beecher; a "Lalor" letter; a Thanksgiving story, "The Praise Meeting at Ponca City," by Eliot McCormick; and the opening chapters of the new and romantic serial, "The Little Belle of Bloomington," whose anonymous author, we are told, has a world-wide reputation.

The use of chloride of potassium is recommended in Germany as a means of increasing the growth of wool in sheep. Some German chemists have made experiments with the article, proving that the growth of wool is promoted by its use. It is administered in the proportion of one part of chloride to nine parts of salt. It not only increases the production of the wool, but improves the quality, and promotes the general health of the animal.

We compile the following items on rice from the Annual Circular of Messia Dan Talmage's Sons & Co., New Orleans, La. In regard to the crop of 1872-73, they say: The planting and growing seasons were favorable and the harvest was mainly accomplished before the frost reached the country parishes. The yield is hardly up to expectations, but the crop will be larger than last year. On account of fine harvest weather the average quality will be better than last season. Lands suitable for rice culture are in demand, and this branch of agricultural industry is destined to be of great value to the commercial interests of the State. Crop of 1872-73 was 143,000 barrels; crop of 1873-74 estimated at 150,000 barrels.

The San Francisco Chronicle asks if polygamy is a crime why is that a polygamist can take his seat in the Forty-Sixth Congress. To which we answer that polygamy is not a crime except by constitution of a so-called law, passed in 1862. If a man has not married more wives than one, in Utah, since '62 he is not a criminal. And if he has, and polygamy is a crime, proof generally has to precede conviction in a civilized country, and conviction must precede condemnation of any just kind. We are aware, however, that furious anti-polygamists do not want to wait for either conviction or proof, but would like to blow "Mormonism" proof and all, into kingdom come. They can't do it though.

Hunter, the murderer of Armstrong, has for his counsel the late Secretary of the Navy, Socor F. Robeson. He has been making another effort to save Hunter from the hangman, although sentenced to death. It appears that Armstrong received his death blow in New Jersey, but died in Pennsylvania, having crossed over the Delaware after being wounded by Hunter. Robeson contends that the State of New Jersey had no jurisdiction in the case because the murdered man died in Pennsylvania. It is presumable that if Hunter had been tried in Pennsylvania, Robeson would claim that the latter State had no jurisdiction of the case because the offence was committed in New Jersey. The object of lawyers are singular and various, and if courts and the public were guided by their pleadings, what is white to day would be black to-morrow, and right and wrong would be interconvertible terms. It is not likely that Hunter will escape.

TWO BELLIGERENT REPUBLICS.

War is now pending to the East and the British troops are forcing their way into Afghanistan, with danger in the front and trouble in the rear, the Western Hemisphere is not entirely at peace. War is likely to break out at any time in South America. Chile and the Argentine Republic are at loggerheads.

Reference to the map will show that Chile is a narrow strip of country, running north and south along nearly the whole west line of the Argentine Republic, and separated from it by the high chain of mountains known as the Andes. Chile abuts out the latter and much larger country from contact with the Pacific Coast. To the south of both countries lies Patagonia, the western portion of which, consisting of a number of rocky islands stretching south nearly to Cape Horn, is under the dominion of Chile, and she has a station on the Brunswick Peninsula called Port Famine. The eastern part of Patagonia, comprehending all of it that lies between these islands and the Atlantic Ocean, is claimed by the Argentine Confederation. The question of the possession of the entire country which is likely to provoke a war between these two nations.

The Argentines are principally interested in flocks and herds, and as Patagonia is mainly a succession of pastures, it is a valuable object to the Argentines as a vast herd ground. Its western shore, with the mountainous islands which are almost attached to the coast, is densely wooded, and its climate vigorous and disagreeable. But the possession of the whole country would give the Argentines a western as well as eastern coast line, and keep the Chileans confined to the mainland shut in from the east by the Andes.

If the dispute should result in open hostilities, the Argentines would have the advantage in the forwarding of troops and supplies, as they could march into Patagonia direct without impediment, while the Chileans would have to cross the Andes, which is a lofty height, and are penetrated only through difficult passes.

The Argentine Republic is a confederation of several communities, something after the pattern of the Government of the United States, each province having a distinct local government.

Chile is also a republic, but is not.

Union of commonwealths, the Intendentes, Governors of Departments, &c., being appointed by the President, who is elected every five years. It is possible that the quarrel will be settled without recourse to arms, but present indications point to a prolonged and bitter struggle between the two republics.

THE "MILLENNIAL STAR."

It is our column of special business notices will be found an advertisement in relation to the Millennial Star, showing how and on what terms it can be obtained by those who wish to subscribe for it, in this Territory.

The Star is the oldest periodical of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, having been continuously issued for about forty years. It has always been an instructive periodical, particularly to members of the Church, and still maintains its interest. To the Saints of Great Britain it is really a necessity, and it is a matter of surprise that reaching Utah, more of them do not still look for their weekly Star which formerly was no more like us large.

The news in Breathitt County.

The Herald's Lexington, Ky., special says: There is a lull in the Breathitt County war. The murderer Little has been removed to Lexington, and there seems no thing now to fight about. No further trouble is anticipated.

Stephens and the Message.

The Herald's Washington special says: Al. Alexander Stephens, on the whole, thinks well of Hayes' message, though he thinks exaggerated accounts of the southern outrages have reached the President. If there have been outrages they should be redressed. Other democrats thought the stories from him were exaggerated, and hinted that Hayes may be handle of them for political effect.

N.Y. Friends Comment on the Presidential Message.

The Star says: In this message Hayes fails to call to recognize the growth and passing character of the times; fails to make any new suggestions worthy of a man of affairs, and again shows himself to be an incompetent as he is a fraudulant President.

The Times says: The message is ineffective as well as brief; it is silent where positive utterances are required; where it is necessary to trust to non-committal points in inference to which the head of the administration should be emphatic, and in its treatment of controverted topics is pervaded by a mild optimism which, in some quarters, may pass for amiability, but will be more generally regarded as an evidence of weakness.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The World does not criticize the message as a whole, but discusses it in detail. It says: We quite agree with Garfield, in thinking some attention ought to be paid to what he, yesterday, called the "small and inconsequential" aspects of the message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is, the President evinces good sense and sound discretion, but what he says is what he omitted. One will say it is evasive, ambiguous, and conciliatory, not very striking, and in no respect an original message.

The Tribune says: The message is a plain document, a mere synopsis; and congratulates the country generally in Utah, especially those who have come from European countries, would be profited by the rays of this constant and consistent luminary.

The Herald says: The message is moderate, well calculated, more appropriate for missions, which imply reconciliation with his political party than for recommendations looking to legislative action. Plain and nervous as the message is