MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

Women and Children Thrown From Buggy Without Serious Injury.

Mrs. Benjamin B. Brewster, her two children, and Miss Maggie L. Hill were thrown from a buggy in a runaway accident last night but fortunately escaped serious injury. Mrs. Brewster, who is the wife of Ben Brewster, foreman of the Western Reclaiming company's bottling works, was driving west on First North street, when the horse became unmanageable and ran away. He headed north along First West street, until Third North was reached, and in attempting to turn a corner there, overturned the buggy and threw himself to the ground. Men pounced upon him in time to prevent serious damage from his kicking and plunging, and when the occupants of the buggy were examined it was found that they had escaped with only slight bruises.

TOMATO BLIGHT ALL OVER STATE.

D. C. Adams Says It Has Destroyed Fully Sixty Per Cent of This Year's Crop.

ATTACKS PLANT AT THE ROOTS

Those Affected Should be Torn Up, Hauled Away and Burned—Canteries All Right.

D. C. Adams of this city is an authority on tomato raising and canning, and when asked this morning for his views on the blight, and the effect on the local canning interests, he said: "The blight covers all of the Utah producing districts, and the cause of it is a small worm which attacks the plant at the root, and its ravages are presently manifested at the tops of the plant in the shape of the blight. The plant turns brown and eventually withers away before the vegetable develops. The percentage of loss is already 60 per cent, and is increasing. I should say, from my experience, that the blight has been growing slightly every year for the last five years, until the climax has at last been reached. But it is going to be stopped.

To stop the blight, every producer should go into his fields without delay, pull up the blighted plants—roots and all, haul them away and burn them, and keep this thing up all through the season. Then at the close of the season, instead of merely allowing the plants to wither away, they should all be pulled out by the roots and burned, and the ground plowed in the fall for other crops, for wheat and barley, for the following two years. I don't mean to say that growers should go out of the tomato raising business, because it is very profitable, and creates labor accounts for every farmer. But the trouble with the average farmer in growing tomatoes, when his plants are struck with blight, is that as soon as he notices it, he becomes discouraged, and fails to give his fields the attention needed, when they should be given more attention than ever, the ground be kept absolutely free from weeds, and careful irrigation given that the tomatoes will keep well up. If proper care had been exercised when the blight opened, the plants would have been anywhere near the present loss by blight. That this blight is a contagion is demonstrated by the fact that the tomato fields in the best condition today are those of virgin soil, so that the farmer will do well who plows out his tomato field in the fall or next spring, and puts the ground in good shape for growing tomatoes.

"As to the canneries, I notice there has been considerable talk about their closing this season, and about foreign tomatoes being imported. The facts are that there are enough stock tomatoes carried over with the futures to be put out, to bridge over the shortage until the crop of 1906, so the canneries will run although the influence of running on full time, they will run from one to three or four days per week as crop conditions will justify."

The leading members of the company work as hard at the end of the season as they do at the opening, and seem generally able to win favor whatever their lines. Baby Sveanson, a local performer who has appeared in child roles several times during the company's stay here, was very much at home in a leading part last night. In its nature the play was a thriller cast in border scenes and characters, and full of local incidents. It took well with a fair sized audience, and will no doubt remain a good drawing card. "Jack O'Diamonds" remains in the open week with the usual Saturday matinee.
