It is probable that the attention of the new ministry, when it is formed, will be turned more towards internal reforms than foreign aggression, and that peace, progress and commercial and industrial recuperation will be the watchwords of a Gliadstone administration. It is not certain that the great statesman will be called to the head of affairs or that he will consent, if requested, to occupy the position of the chief adviser of the Crown. The Queen diviser of the crown. dislikes him, and his exclusion from tions. dialikes him, and his exclusion from office in 1874 was mortifying to his pride and sense of justice. But he will be the leader of his party. No-thing can prevent that, because he is its greatest mind, most logical thinker, most able debater, and most powerful statesman in every sense. The Marquis of Hartington or Earl Granville may be called to form a ministry, but Gladstone will be the real head of the party and of the House of Commons, and after of the House of Commons, and after her rough voyage. his retirement and the brief success of his brilliant but now conquered rival, will in all probability become Ninateen persons, mostly students, have been tried by court martial in Odessa for varions political offences.
