EVENING NEWS.

Friday, March 6, 1880. The "Hot" Down to Earth.

After making inquiries of every person who had seen the matter of the old Mr. and Mrs. Jones reach the Detroit and Milwaukee depot yesterday in a good order, they were shown into the waiting room. They did not enter, however, until the old man had read the sign over the door and remarked:

"Waiting room? What? Wonder what she's waiting for? Well, you can wait as long as the room can hold 'Nancy'."

"I told her," she replied, as she departed her heavy trunk, "to wait of the wooden sofa—I told you to see all you could and say as little as possible."

"That's what I'm doing," he growled, as he drew his coat and left and backed up to the red hot coal stove. He had just become interested in reading the "Broad gauge, double track—three hours' time saved to New York," when the black hat blue coat began falling rapidly to the ground, and several parties called out to him in a warning way. He leaped away, pulling his pants up from the waiting room. He pulled him down beside her and hurriedly whispered:

"If you were alone, I'd spank you good and sound! The back of your coat is falling right out, and everybody's laughing!"

"It's no such thing—I haven't laughing to show for it," he retorted around. "How did I know there was any fire in the stove. How could I see my back? It was the black hat blue coat that was troubling water, settled down. The old lady was hunting her snuff-box, and the old man was sticking his teeth into an apple when he complacently remarked:

"I'm going to get this coat off and look at the mortal injuries!"

"You keep right on," he warned. "You'd make a nice spectacle here in your shirt sleeves, wouldn't you?"

"Haint this a free country?"

"You keep right on," he warned. "That snuff-box! It was all of ten minutes before he suddenly announced:

"When the old man Barnes was here last summer he got the best piece of snuff he ever stuck his mouth into, and I'm going out to find the place, and buy one. You are going to stay right here, and keep your head shut!"

"Yes, you are!"

That said, he turned, and he leaned back, lighting his last pipe. The old man, who had been sitting on the sofa, almost doing when he saw a snuff-box, he turned, and he tried to scratch the sole of his left foot with the toe of his right foot.

"Then blessed children! He who had been sitting on the sofa, almost doing when he saw a snuff-box, he turned, and he tried to scratch the sole of his left foot with the toe of his right foot."

"I tell you they are!"

"All the folks are looking at me," he exclaimed, "and I'm sitting on the sofa, almost doing when he saw a snuff-box, he turned, and he tried to scratch the sole of his left foot with the toe of his right foot."

"I'm going to pull my boots off now," he said, "and I'm going to scratch the sole of my left foot with the toe of my right foot."

"I'm going to pull my boots off now," he said, "and I'm going to scratch the sole of my left foot with the toe of my right foot."
