

EASTERN NOTES.

J. J. Dally, a wealthy merchant of Eutaw, Ala., being crossed in love three months ago, turned his effects into cash, and went to New Orleans on a desperate spree. In a few weeks he squandered his accumulations for thirty years, and ended by dying in a station house of delirium tremens.

Molly Woods, a young colored woman, died recently, probably from the effects of fright. It is stated that she accompanied the picnic party of the colored Masons on Wednesday last, and while there a colored man by the name of Fred White caught a large snake, after killing which, he sportively wound it around her neck. This frightened her so that she was nearly thrown into convulsions, and after reaching home she is stated to have suffered from severe convulsions all night, but felt some better in the morning.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce, July 10.

Two little heroes live in Sharon, Mass. Recently they accomplished a feat which doubtless will be a pleasant recollection to them all their lives. Two gentlemen were out rowing on a pond in town, and in attempting to recover an oar which one of them had dropped, they upset their boat, and of course both fell into the water. Their cries for help were heard by these two boys, Masters Fred. Holder, aged twelve years, and Charles J. Tyler, aged nine years, and they, in a light skiff, speedily paddled to the aid of the imperiled gentlemen. They exacted from the imperiled men, while still in the water, a promise that they would implicitly obey directions, and not, by struggling, endanger their own skiff, and then, by careful management, taking one on either side of the boat, succeeded in rescuing both and landing them safely.

The Indiana saloon keepers are just now busy in devising methods of escaping the liabilities of the State liquor law, which is very similar to the Illinois law, in that it provides for the collection of damages from liquor-sellers by members of the family or other relatives, in case the drunkard abuses his family or does other mischief. The saloon keepers of Blufftown have issued a regular notification to the public that, having obtained license according to law to sell spirituous liquors, they propose to conduct business according to law. They therefore notify all married women who do not want them to sell to their husbands to leave written notice to that effect within three days, "and all unmarried women or girls who have 'fellers' or beaux whom they do not wish to have taking their bitters at our bars will please give like notice." They have also issued a form of permit for the use of wives, in which they grant the husbands the right to drink when and what they please, and waive all claims for damages arising therefrom.—Chicago Tribune.

A remarkable case of deception, successfully practiced for many years by a smart and handsome Welsh woman, has just come to light in the English courts. Elizabeth Jones, a beautiful and fascinating lady's maid, captivated Mr. Melrose, a rich, retired merchant, became his mistress, and after some years married him. Mr. Melrose was anxious for an heir, so his wife went off on a flying trip of a fortnight, and came back with an infant, with which she affirmed that Providence had blessed her during her absence. Poor old Mr. Melrose was credulous, received his supposed heir in his arms, blessed it, and dying some years after left to him $200,000, the income going to the mother while she remained a widow. The widow married again, however. Melrose's relations concluded to look into the matter, and it turned out that his wife had practiced a gross fraud by adopting another woman's son for the purpose of securing a good income for herself. The scheming woman is safe in India, while her adopted son is left penniless.

—The Shah is a Mussulman; but he don't travel on it.—Philadelphia Star.

—Dr. Sears thinks that private schools in the South hurt the public schools. In fact, each injure the other. There is not money enough nor are there children enough for both.

—They have never been able in New York to determine whether it is the cholera-morbus or heart-disease they have there, although they have done their best.

—A Vermont paper says a young lady from the country called at a bookstore the other day and asked for "a deck of them new postal keards—double-headers."

—A little boy was nearly drowned the other day in a barrel of whitewash at Oxford, Pennsylvania. When he grows up and becomes a Philadelphia politician, he will take a daily bath in that kind of stuff without minding it.

—A young lady of Brooklyn was recently struck with the uselessness of her life, and immediately went to work with vigor to learn plain sewing. At latest date she had hemmed one side of a towel, which the proud parents have framed and hung in a conspicuous position in their parlor.

—Colfax goes on forgiving his enemies and giving good advice to young men in the Christian Association just as though Oakes Ames had never lived or had died twenty years ago. As Jerrold once said of a man, "He is so good he would pour rose water over a toad."

—Kind words are the bright flowers of earth's existence; they make a very paradise of the humblest home the world can show. Use them, and especially around the fireside circle. They are jewels beyond price, and make the weighed down spirits more glad than all other blessings the world can give.

—The Cincinnati Commercial says if the democratic party will only take its dead carcass out of the way the "liberals" can carry the state of Ohio. The hour is ripe and the time has come. This confession that the "liberals" cannot move a corpse does not speak very well for the strength of that party.—Springfield Union.

—A mouse nest, feathered with fourteen dollars of greenbacks and fractionals, was found recently in a store at Green Bay, Wisconsin, whereupon a local paper observes: "This is a strong argument for the resumption of specie payments, as even the lower animals are growing wasteful and extravagant under an inflation of paper currency."

—An inquisitive urchin the other day, while reciting a lesson, says an exchange, from the Sermon on the Mount, broke out, "Ma, did Jesus get $2,000 for preaching?" "No, my child, he did not get anything." "Why didn't they pay him?" "Because he didn't preach politics. The devil offered him a big salary to do it, but he would not accept the call."

—"Mr. Speaker," exclaimed a member of the Arkansas Legislature, "my colleague taunts me with a desire for fame. I scorn the imputation, sir. Fame, sir! What is fame? It is a shaved pig with a greased tail, which slips through the hands of thousands, and then is accidentally caught by some fellow that happens to hold on to it. I let this greased tailed quadruped go by me without an effort to clutch it, sir."

—A lady was complimenting a Frenchman on his manner of speaking English, which she justly said was an accomplishment extremely rare among his compatriots. "Ah, madame," he said, "you do not ought to say zat. I know well zat I speak it but indecently as yet." In another case, a German made the following observation to a friend of his, an Englishman: "I lofe de horse, I lofe de dog, I lofe de cat, I lofe de cow—in trute, I lofe everything that is beastly."

—An eminent merchant, when quite young, and before he knew anything of the business, succeeded after many trials in finding a place where he had to do menial tasks for his board only. He was not, like some young men, careful to earn no more than his pay, but disregarding all such considerations, he went to work and made himself generally useful to all—was up first in the morning, made fires, swept rooms, and did everything that the other young men shunned. At the end of the year he had rendered his services so valuable that he had good offers from other places—but no one could spare him. He was placed in a higher position, and in a few years became a partner in the business. But it must be distinctly observed that he was willing to begin at the bottom of the ladder.
