GREAT EATERS.

Great eaters never live long. A voracious appetite, so far from being a sign of health, is a certain indication of disease. Some dyspeptics are always hungry; feel best when they are eating, but as soon as they have eaten they endure torments so distressing in their nature as to make the unhappy victim wish for death. The appetite of health is that which inclines to eat moderately, when eating time comes, and which, when satisfied, leaves no unpleasant reminders. Multitudes measure their health by the amount they can eat; and of any ten persons, nine are gratified at an increase of weight, as if mere bulk were an index of proportion, decisive proof of existing disease; showing that the absorbents of the system are too weak to discharge their duty; and the tendency to fatness, to obesity, increases, until existence is a burden, and sudden death closes the history. Particular enquiry will almost unvaryingly elicit the fact that a fat person, however rubicund and jolly, is never well; and yet they are envied.

While great eaters never live to an old age, abstainers never, for a single day, without some "symptoms," some feeling sufficiently disagreeable to attract the mind's attention unpleasantly, small eaters—those who eat regularly of plain food—usually have no "spare flesh," are wiry and enduring, and live to an active old age. Remarkable exemplifications of this statement are found in the lives of centenarians of a past age.

Galen, one of the most distinguished physicians among the ancients, lived very sparingly after the age of twenty-eight, and died in his hundred and fortieth year. Kentiger, who never tasted spirits or wine, and worked all his life, reached a hundred and eighty-five years. Jenkins, a poor Yorkshire fisherman, who lived on the coarsest diet, was one hundred and six-ty-nine years old when he died. Old Parr lived to a hundred and fifty-three; his diet being milk, cheese, whey, small beer, and coarse bread. The favorite diet of Henry Francisco, who lived to one hundred and forty, was tea, bread and butter, and baked apples. Ephraim Pratt, of Shutsbury, Mass., who died at the age of one hundred and seventeen, lived chiefly on milk, and even that in small quantity; his son Michael, by similar means, lived to be one hundred and three years old. Father Cull, a Methodist clergyman, died last year at the age of one hundred and five, the main diet of his life having been salted swine's flesh (bacon) and bread made of Indian meal.

From these statements, nine general readers out of ten will jump to the conclusion that milk is "healthy," as are baked apples and bacon. These conclusions do not legitimately follow. The only inference that can be safely drawn, is from the only fact running through all these cases, that plain food and a life of steady labor tend to a great age. As to the healthfulness and life-protecting qualities of any article of diet named; nothing can be inferred, for no two of the men lived on the same kind of food, all that can be rationally and safely said is, either that they lived so long in spite of the quality of the food they ate, or that their instinct called for a particular kind of food; and the gratification of that instinct, instead of its perversion, with a life of steady labor, directly caused healthfulness and great length of days. We must not expect to live long by doing any one thing which an old man did, and omit all others, but by doing all he did, that is, work steadily, as well as eat mainly a particular dish.

Hyacinthe's Example to be Largely Followed—The Contract Illegal Under French Law.

Father Hyacinthe's example will be followed by a large number of French priests, who, the Patrie states, are going to renounce publicly their vows of celibacy. The publicity of the renunciation is the chief novelty connected with the marriage of France. The Paris Journal is a supporter of the throne and altar, and held in favor at the Archepiscopal Palace behind Notre Dame. And it says that in the diocese of Paris alone the average number of priests who marry is from twenty to thirty in the year. It mentions that when the Abbe Michaud announced to the Archbishop his intention to take a wife he met with no opposition. All that was said to him was, "Marry since you must, but make no noise about it." The French priests aspiring to matrimony have great difficulty in persuading women of respectable rank to espouse them. There is (says a Paris correspondent) both a strong prejudice against churchmen who break their vows of celibacy and a legal hindrance to their getting married. The nullity of a priest's marriage was established a few years ago in a celebrated suit in which Madame Claude Vignon, the accomplished Parliamentary correspondent of the Independence Belge, was the plaintiff. This lady, who had just become the wife of M. Rouvier, a Marseilles deputy, had not much trouble in putting away her first husband, because he had been in holy orders before she married him. The children born of the marriage went to the mother, for the father was incompetent to give them so much as the quasi legal status of enfants reconnus. Jules Favre exerted all his eloquence on behalf of the repudiated husband; but the tribunal before which the case was brought ruled that "marriage with the Church precludes civil matrimony." This jurisprudence is a fact which should not be overlooked by ladies who fancy French priests.

Occupation. What a glorious thing it is for the human heart! Those who work hard seldom yield to fancied or real sorrow. When grief sits down, folds its hands, and mournfully feeds upon its own fears, weaving the dim shadow that a little exertion might sweep away into a funeral pall; the strong spirit is shorn of its might, and sorrow becomes our master. When trouble flows upon you dark and heavy, toil not with the waves, and wrestle not with the torrent; rather seek by occupation to divert the dark waters that threaten to overwhelm you with a thousand channels, which the duties of life always present. Before you dream of it, those waters will fertilize the present and give birth to fresh flowers, that will become pure and holy in the sunshine which penetrates to the path of duty in spite of every obstacle. Grief, after all, is but a selfish feeling, and most selfish is the man who yields himself to the indulgence of any passion which brings no joy to his fellow-man.
