LONDON LETTER.

The Panic at Nice and Monte Carlo —Things Theatrical—The American Exhibition, Etc.

LONDON, February 20th, 1887.
The beginning of Lent finds London dull enough to assure you. People disappear like magic, though the usual contingent who go to Monte Carlo and Nice are frightened away by the earthquakes, and are puzzling their brains in the effort to decide upon some other place in which to kill the dullness of the season, and to find prayer with gambling and flirting.

The panic at Nice and Monte Carlo was a very curious thing. It was according to all accounts, but there is no humorous side to it for the poor inn-keepers and tradesmen of that region, who not only have actual damages to their property, but who are puzzled by the earthquake, and are frightened away by the earth-
prayer with gambling and flirting.

prayer with gambling and flirting.

was a very curious thing. It was

taken the control of a score of the largest restaurants in London, and of about half the railway station restaurants in the United Kingdom. Of the marvelous system of management, and the way in which it is managed by their handsome manager, Mr. Javal, I will not say more than a detail next week.

This contract pretty well concludes the important concessions to be given out, and Mr. Whitley, the chairman of the Council, has taken personal charge of the work at the grounds, and is engaged in infusing, in his magnetic way, his enthusiasm into all hands, down to the "navvies," or day laborers, as we call them.

There is a good story on Lord Rosebery, who married Miss Rothschild, and got a pot of the He-bride money with her.

"A big dinner the other evening in Calcutta, the Duchess of Manchester was seated next to the Earl of Moxferrugner. Presently the latter observed to his fair neighbor:

"The Earl regarded the plump form and face of 'Hannah' for some moments, and then remarked with a sigh:

"Poor young man? I hope they allow him a nice one at home!"

THAT PARTIES
have just been imported into London, and are created in New York as their place of invention, and now bear the dinner course to the guests of the table, and in time will doubtless reach our shores. The latest idea is to accompany each lady guest before-hand with the name of her cavalier, whom she then informs respecting the economy that she is to wear the gentleman in a masculine dress to match. At a recent dinner party of this nature (Garnet was escorted by Escamille, a Chinese mandarin led out a Chinese lady, Madame de la Roche, the wife of
