of the most beautiful women on the American stage and, like Maxine El-Nott, was thought to owe to that fact whatever prominence ste had attained in reality Miss Bingham is a very talented actress. Like Maxine Elliott, she is unfortunate enough to be the wife of a man who is able to give her the position in theatrical life to which her ability, independently of her beauty, entitles her.

There is nothing criminal in being beautiful or in being married to a man with money. At least the ordinary individual would not consider either an infraction of the law, and yet both are regarded as serious misdemeanors by envious stagefolk as well as by that contemptible class which accepts all it can get from managers and then proceeds to "roast" their attractions in the most forceful terms of which its limited vocabulary will admit. Of the two classes mentioned both Miss Elliott and Miss Bingham have long been the victims. They should not mind this carping, however, for they must realize that it is due solely to jealousy alike of their beauty, ability and position in life.
