White chiffon rolls are not expensive luxuries. If one knows how to wash them. Use warm water into which white soap has been shaved. Soften the water with a little borax or add a little alcohol, a tablespoonful to a basin of water. Wash the chiffon by squeezing it in the water, rubbing a little soap on it as possible. The very soiled spots must have soap, of course. Rinse in tepid water, to which a little alcohol has been added, and wring out in a soft towel. Pull into shape, and iron while wet.

Celery jelly is a new thing, and has been invented to go with fruit and nut salads. Good Housekeeping gives directions for making it. Cover two cups of celery, cut in fine pieces, with one pint of hot water. Add a few slices of onion, a little parsley, salt and paprika. Let simmer for half an hour or longer, then strain through a double cheesecloth. Add to the celery water two tablespoonfuls of gelatin softened in cold water, and the juice of a lemon. Strain again into a large pitcher wet with ice water. The jelly should be about an inch thick. When it is cold and quite stiff, cut in squares or any desired shape, and use it to garnish the salad.

Canning fruit without sugar has come to be quite the approved method, and those who have tried it insist that fruit so canned tastes as it did when perfectly fresh. The process is simple. Prepare the fruit in the usual manner, place in porcelain-lined preserving kettles, or enamel dish pans kept for the purpose, and put over it enough cold water to cover. Heat the fruit scalding hot and fill heated jars as full as possible, pouring in juice quite up to the brim. Seal tightly, using all precautions to ensure a perfectly all-tight jar.

Said the manager of a lingerie waist factory recently: "The demand upon us from the wholesalers and the retail shops is something that it is impossible to meet. New York must be ordering these waists at the rate of 150,000 a week."

Naturally, many of the factory-made lingerie waists are unworthy of the name. On the other hand, many are identical in design, if not in execution, with the finest convent handwork. Naturally, also, the number of bona fide hand-made waists, though relatively small, is reckoned in fact in many figures.
