Limit of Physical Endurance.

The terrible strength of the Greek Roman Wrestlers—Moses, Ulysses and both Men and Cattle.

A good many of those present at the Greek Roman wrestling match, last Monday night, were not satisfied with the result of the affair, but it was unavoidable. For upwards of four hours, Mr. Christol and Prof. Miller were continually engaged in a terrific struggle. The auditors in front of the stage their efforts may not have seemed so terribly fatiguing, but those who were in the immediate vicinity of the wrestlers will bear witness to the contrary. Both men were putting forth every effort to win. Miller, as a rule, resorted to defensive tactics, but his occasional efforts to throw his antagonist were characterized by undoubted muscular exertion. His powerful frame was exerted to the utmost. The thombold nature of the contest, the indignity of the brow, were long in numerous places by the violence of his exertions. Nor were Christol's exertions any better. Again and again would he seize Miller around the neck and shoulders, and with all his strength attempt to hurl him to the floor. At the critical moment his grip would loosen, and the man would slip from his grasp.
Time and again were Miller's neck and shoulders seized by the muscular Frenchman, and with any other man serious effects would have resulted. On such occasions their labored breathing and the swelling of every muscle betokened the violence of their efforts. M. Christol is not only a very powerful man, but he possesses undoubted knowledge of the science of wrestling. What Miller lacks in skill he makes up in massive frame and wondrous strength of resistance. Hence his determination to act as far as possible on the defensive. Hoping to tire out his opponent, he himself succumbed, and had the contest continued through the night neither would have secured another fall. The reason for this is apparent; Nature could no longer withstand the shock, and, though the will was strong, muscles lost their power, and the men could do nothing.
The triceps muscle, which works the hinge joints of the elbows, and the muscles of the forearm, which strengthen the wrist, were no longer serviceable. The muscles controlling the fingers lost their sensibility and their usefulness. While the deltoides and the biceps are yet strong, comparatively speaking, they are no longer useful without the aid of the others. Neither of the men could retain his grip and unless the grip was maintained the lock was useless. To continue the struggle under such circumstances would have been senseless to say the least. In their eagerness to win, and doubtless actuated by an excellent motive, they had yielded to good advice, and the referee was authorized to decide the match a draw. In this decision he was supported by Mr. James O'Neill, Judge for Professor Miller, and Mr.
Emil Regnier, Judge for Christol.
The first round lasted two hours and a half, resulted in favor of Christol; the second was won by Miller in thirteen minutes. The third had continued for over an hour and a half when the contest closed. Thus, at 1:45 o'clock in the morning, the second wrestling to a standstill. It is confidently expected that another match will be made. Yesterday both men were suffering considerably from the effects of their protracted struggle. Their bruises were so severe that it was impossible for either man to raise his arms to his head. A few days of rest and proper care will, however, work a cure, and then they will be as anxious as ever to resume the contest. That Christol will challenge Miller again there is no doubt, nor can the latter refuse to accept.—New York Times.
