. IT IS NOT THE REMEDY. THE labor question is one of the greatest of the age. It is one of the most difficult problems to grapple with. The methods proposed for its satisfactory solution are almost count-

A few of the more philanthropically inclined large firms of the east have tackled it so far as their immediate business is concerned. It is doubtful about the plan extending beyond limited circle, although it has been asserted by some ournals of preminence that if the system were universal, strikes and labor and capital conflicts would be at an end, and a pacific era inaugurated. The method is not entirely new, except perhaps in the way of its application as a remedy against the strifes into which the two classes concerned are plunged-workers and capitalists It simply consists of employers giving employes an interest in their business, by sharing the profits with them. This is done on the equitaable principle that the results are produced by a combination of the forces of the two, the one being inoperative without the other. Those who anticipate an extirpation of labor troubles on this basis are resting expectancy on a frail foundation Our reason for taking this view is that the system must be equal in its operations, otherwise it is unsound. This equilibrium demands that, as the profits accrue to both classes in times when business is flourishing, the losses should be borne in the same ratio when the dullness of the times demands that if conducted at all it must be at a loss To give the profits to one class under a certain condition and the losses to but one under opposite circumstances would not be fair or just. Yet in times of unprofit it is doubtful whether the worker would be willing to accede to the situation. Rather the question does not admit of much doubt. The probability is in favor of discontent and conflict. Indeed it is questionable If the workers could pessibly bear the proportionate dimination of income in stringent times, unless they were in times of prosperity more thrifty than men ordinarily are. We are afraid that those who have built high hopes of a solution on this basis are doomed to disappointment. Besides the possibilities involved in the ebb and flow of trade, the great majority of capitalists are too grasping ir accede to it. harvest tinge. Here and there over the After all, the only panaces for nearly whole valley, like the shadows of all existing ills must consist of a clouds, is to be seen the dark green of greater breadth of intelligence and a change of heart. With this perverse and selfish generation the latter ingredient of the compound appears to be rather remote.

SOURCES OF PROFIT.

The settlers of this mountain region are only beginning to utilize the sources of wealth within their reach. The agriculturists of the Territory will see evidence of the truth of this statement in a communication which appears elsewhere in this issue from "N. L. N.," in which the profits of tree planting are partially set forth. The results of the experiments in this line which have been tried in the town of Benjamin, Utah County, should stimulate the farmers throughout this whole region to plant trees. Timber is a crop easily planted, requiring the air, whereas if farther apart they would spread out and become bushy. little or no care other than to After a few years half of them may be be supplied with water during the dry season, and yields enormous profits. In view of the late and heavy, risc in the price of wooden building material, and the scarcity of timber of all kinds in this region, the industry of the late and heavy, risc in the price of wooden building material, and the scarcity of timber of all kinds in this region, the industry of the later kind on a sintimber culture will certainly become eld. These were sixteen years more and more important and profitable, and the farmer who has a few frost: The writer was informed by acres of growing trees will find that he possesses the source of a very satispossesses the source of a very satisfactory revenue.

From an eminence | bers. the scene is very picturesque. The patches of dark green, white flecked, marking distant cities veiled by a thin gauze of mist, contrast beautifully with the lighter shades of fields and meadows. Nearer to our view, all the beauties of combination and contrast are distinctly marked as by partition fences. Fringing the valley and hiding the dry benches from the bold, blank stare of the summer sun, are broad tracts of rye, already taking a of lucern patches, some of them being clipped swath after swath, by the mower, red glistening in the distance. Our nearest canons are pretty well de-pleted of wood and timber, and it is high time that our tarmers were nundred trees than buy wagon tires and mend broken wheels. The writer was told by one gentleman that from a single row of trees two rods long, on a hedge that could have been used for nothing else,

This had been but five or six years growing. He also declared that though he began the practice of planting only about ten years ago, he had sufficient timber to spare, without materially damaging his grove, to fence in his whole farm of 800 acres. His plan is to cut branches off the trees already growing and stick them into the ground from two to four feet apart on both sides of a water ditch, those cut away for fuel and the rest be left

At home, he reflected, all our mountain streams with miles and miles of fertile acres on either side, support at presen along their banks scarcely anything better than scrub oak, willow, squaw-brush, and wild rose. Why cannot our people be awakened to these grand fa-cilities? Here acorns could be gathered at 40 or 50 cents per bushel. Why should not every town turn out with the old fervor of pioneer co-operation, and plant each a carload of acorns along the streams that give them the health, wealth and comforts they now enjoy? Why should they not be placed along every causi and water ditch. We have yet to learn the reason, if it is not to be found in downright care-lessness and indifference.
