At the Quail factory... Mr. E. M. Jones, the General Manager, in giving the advantages of the quail system in boiler and steamship, said: Fifty years ago we all made better and closer at home for the same reason we traveled in a steamship.

Also let me mention another point that often escapes observation. After a long life of study I have come to the conclusion that the wisest use of the boiler is to collect a man's cream for a week before burning it, and in spite of all you can't get more than 100 lbs. of steam per ton of coal.

There is, however, one line in the path of the factories, one solution found their needs, which supplies them with fuel, and which even in an industrial way, is superior to the best thick fuel of the country.
