CONTESTED ELECTION,

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Geo. R. Maxwell vs. Geo. Q. Cannon.

Argument of Halbert E. Paine, Counsel for Sitting Member.

(Before the Committee on Elections of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C., 1874.)

These were Mr. Cessna's exact words, to be found on page 3863 of volume 79 of the Congressional Globe:

"There is one thing which, perhaps, I should have stated to the House, and which I state now. The report in this case is based upon three propositions. The first is this: that when one of two candidates is ineligible, the votes given for him are of no effect, and the other candidate is elected. I desire to state to the House that both of my colleagues on the committee (Mr. Hale and Mr. Randall) dissent from the first proposition contained in the report, and that so far as anybody is to be bound by that first proposition, there is no one to be bound by it but myself."

Mr. Hale of Maine, was absent from the House when this case was called up. His relation to the report can readily be ascertained.

Smarting under a sense of injustice, many Representatives were casting about for some parliamentary device by which the House might, notwithstanding the motion to reconsider had been laid on the table, yet have a fair vote on the question of the admission of Mr. Wallace. With what success, the following literal extract from the Globe will show:

"The SPEAKER. The chair has been appealed to, conversationally, by several gentlemen, to indicate some method by which a record can be made in this case. The chair would suggest that the simplest mode would be to allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Randall) to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the Committee of Elections was adopted, and then the other gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Cessna) could move to lay that motion to reconsider on the table.

"Mr. RANDALL. Then I will make that motion.

"The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent. Is there objection?

"Mr. CESSNA. I object.

"Mr. BROOKS, of New York. There is no possible thing to be done but to have this man sworn in?

"The SPEAKER. When the House has declared by a vote, whether viva voce, by tellers, or by yeas and nays, that a person is entitled to a seat here, and the motion to reconsider has been laid on the table, it is then as much the right of the member thus declared entitled to his seat to be sworn in as it is the right of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Brooks) to speak upon any question before the House.

"Mr. BROOKS, of New York. If he shall be sworn in, will it be as a member elected in South Carolina or a member elected by this House?

"The SPEAKER. The member from South Carolina will now present himself to be sworn in.

Mr. ALEXANDER S. Wallace then presented himself and took the oath of office prescribed by the act of Congress of July 2, 1862."

I respectfully ask the committee to read the debate in this case. It will be found on pages 3863—6 of volume 79 of the Congressional Globe, (41st Congress.)

Having thus shown that this case of Wallace v. Simpson does not sustain the doctrine of the counsel, I will now proceed to cite, without discussion, the American authorities by which that doctrine is not only overthrown but absolutely annihilated.

The case of Smith v. Brown (2 Bartlet, 395) is the leading case in the House of Representatives. It was reported from the Committee of Elections by the chairman, Mr. Dawes, on the 28th of January, 1868. His exhaustive discussion of the subject will be found on pages 402-405 of the second volume of Bartlett's Contested Election Cases. He refers to the case of Ramsey v. Smith (Clark & Hall, 23,) argued by Mr. Madison at the first session of the 1st Congress; and to the cases of Albert Gallatin in the Senate in 1793, Philip Barton Key in the House in 1807, John Baily in the House in 1824, James Shields in the Senate in 1849, and John Young Brown in the House in 1859. He also reviews the British authorities and the opinion expressed in Cushing's Treatise. And he closes the discussion by declaring that "the law of the British Parliament in this particular has never been adopted in this country, and is wholly inapplicable to the system of government under which we live." I ask the committee to read so much of the report in this case as relates to the point now under consideration. It will be found on pages 402-5 of the second volume of Bartlett's Contested Election Cases.

In the case of Zeigler v. Rice, 2 Bartlett, 884, which is later than Wallace v. Simpson, the committee decided this precise point. I will give their conclusion in their own words, to be found on the 884th page of volume 2 of Bartlett's Contested Election Cases—

"Thus it will be seen that, according to the contestee's own statement, he had entered into an agreement to recruit for the rebel army; was on his way to carry out fully his undertaking when he was captured, and claimed protection as a rebel officer when captured. The committee are well satisfied the acts of contestee were well understood by the voters of said district at the time contestee was voted for; but do not agree with contestant that, as contestee was ineligible, the candidate who was eligible is entitled to the seat."

And they recommended a resolution unseating Mr. Rice, and declaring the seat vacant. But the House refused even to evict Mr. Rice. On the contrary, by the adoption of a substitute for the resolution, without a division, Mr. Rice was declared entitled to the seat.
