-we do not wish to suggest the proper mode of procedure, it is a matter that requires grave and deliberate consideration and exceeds the limits of this paper—therefore, we shall confine ourselves to that branch only which is relevant. Granting that the relation of the exes is an individual liberty that can be abused, we grant that it is subject of regulation by the munipal law, but let it not be forgotten that the conceded authority is relative and not absolute. To assume authority by virtue of might is wrong, therefore the regulation is not dependent upon the will of a not dependent upon the will of a majority, and no matter what the majority believes religious influences have here no right, it is a question of actual material fact. Now what are the facts? Simply these. Our present law and the main part of Engages have an the main part of European law on the union of sexes, that is to say, our marriage, originated in the eleventh century, and was first enforced by Hilde brand, afterward Pope Gregory VII, a time when the Roman church was in a state of seething, scalding corruption, and the motives which gave it birth were those of sordid ambition and an infernal greedy just for power. Truly we have cause Florist, Seedsman and Preserver grees, moved by this holy (?) influ-once of eight centuries, was impel-ied, in the year A.D. 1862, to enact a

With what success, for reasons that great control of the control to strike down the natural liberties of a certain particular portion of members forming the republic. With what success, for reasons that we have shown, history mforms us. This attempt to usurp power, followed and confirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, preme Court of the United States, we venture to say, will be condemned and execrated by posterity.

But what is marriage? It is the contract entered into between a man and a woman, whereby they assume that the individual happiness of each will be furthered. By reason of the contract, the parties assume responsibilities which it becomes the duty of municipal law to enforce. Bear in mind that the law here does not create the obligations; they follow as a natural, legitimate and reasonable consequence. In w does not assume to dictate particular man or woman we shall marry, nor indeed to say whether we shall marry at all. Now what s this contract? It is an agreement between a man and a woman to co-habit and to assume all the obliga-tions that sequently follow in so far as is within the power of each. As the results cannot be undone or disat this distance appears marvellous, declared that every man was born, politically, equal into this world, and that every individual had an inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Upon this broad platform of national liberty, a government was established, differing, essentially, from all other governments. But it was found that the territory thus acquired was. solved, it may wall be asked, Can the law undo the contract? But as For in test stable lay new-born differing, essentially, from all other governments. But it was found that the territory thus acquired was, comparatively speaking, inhabited; therefore, in unison with the liberal principles set forth, laws were enacted offering homes to the oppressed and starving militons of the old world. This offer has been eagerly accepted, and to-day the people of the United States rank from every land and elims, although by far the

It will be seen at a glance, that the law as regards the marriage acts as confirmatory of the will of the individual and not directory and that where it afterwards die tates, it is only in conformity to s contract freely and voluntarily en-

Hence, at the present time, in the legislative, julaw of nature, indeed it is in this respect perfectly helpless. The will of the individual remains beyond dicial and executive departments of our government, there is a natural the reach of human power. Hence, men and women will cohabit is spite of every human law to the form. Figuratively, we untle the old sack, and frem among its dirty contrary. As well might we limit and threadbare contents must hunt the number of a man's children as to limit the number of his wives. A marriage is but a ceremony garment come up to the standard of that propriety which we deem "the thing." Well may we exclaim, Consistency, thou art a jewel! then why attempt a persecution against a mere ceremony? To attempt the control of actual, deep seated actions by superficial means is an attempt unworthy of, and which the American people should scorn. Besides, how ridiculous it looks for us to attempt the regula-tion of other people's family rela-tions when we cannot regulate our

As far as the law against bigamy s concerned, it has a full and comlete eanction, and rest assured that it shall meet with all the support, moral and physical, in our power, but we object, most strenuously, to the outrageous act of debasing and dishonoring the law by bringing it and in a republican government the majority rule. Very well, that we down to the level of the oriental juggler, which we certainly do, when we attempt to prohibit polygamy through an enactment on bigais certainly not almighty; this his-tory flatly contradicts, for we have judicial power on the land to narrow gious persecution, though prosecuted by large majerities.
