Estimated Citizen Called Hence in Prime of Life—Thrilling Runaway—Junction City News Notes.

Ogden, Utah, Oct. 28.—While climbing the mountain east of Ogden yesterday afternoon Arthur Livingston, fell over a cliff a distance of 75 feet and was severely injured. With John E. Salomon and George Farr, he was climbing the mountain side where the cliffs were very steep and had reached almost to the top of the mountain when a heavy fog came on and he lost his footing and fell backwards, turning over on his back. Fortunately he fell on a ledge of rock which broke the force of the fall. His injuries were such as to render him unconscious and he was found by Salomon and Farr a few feet from the mountain side a few feet from the mountain side. He was rushed to his assistance and rendered temporary aid until his relatives could get down the mountain. They carried him in a carriage and brought him to his home in Ogden where Dr. Powers and Ives attended to him. He received a serious injury to his spine and many bruises, but though his injuries are painful, he will recover. His friends say that he had a narrow escape from death, as he was coming down the mountain side and had a few feet further down the mountain he would have gone over another cliff, which was much higher, and he would have been almost certain.
