George's Guilt and Shame.

DALTON, Ga., Oct. 23, 1879.

Editors Deseret News:

Another act in the legal farce called the trial of assassins of Elder Standing has been gone through with. They were indicted for riot and the 20th went up in getting in the testimony and pleas of the attorneys. The Judge delivered his charge and the jury retired to consider their verdict. The testimony was clear and explicit as to the criminality of the prisoner at the bar, but little doubt was expressed at the result, for it had been clearly demonstrated that it would be impossible to convict in the Whitfield County Court. Many leading citizens expressed shame and chagrin at the situation of affairs and deplored the utter inability of the better class of people to enforce the law of the land. The Prosecuting Attorney, A. T. Hackett, and his assistant, Col. W. B. Moore, discharged their duties in a fearless and determined manner, and besought the court to render a verdict of guilty, for the sake of decency and the good name of the State of Georgia to punish the criminals and enforce the law of the State that had been trampled upon in so ruthless a manner. During the time the jury was out a remarkable circumstance occurred. A negro man, named George, who was charged with stealing a gallop of whiskey, valued at four dollars. The jury was empaneled and in just forty minutes a verdict of guilty was rendered, and the Judge after a long-faded lecture on the terrible nature of the crime of stealing, sentenced him to twelve months. Scarcely had the sheriff removed the culprit when the jury sitting on the riot case came in and rendered a verdict of guilty. The deduction was, to commit riot and in doing so kill a "Mormon" Elder was no crime in the eyes of the law of the State of Georgia, but to steal a gallon of whiskey was simply awful, and demanded swift punishment. The whole scene was so grotesque and absurd that the verdict did not help but hurt, and the court and the jury seemed, in some sort of a dim and misty way, to realize that the forum of justice was being made a platform whereon a brutal mob had usurped the place of law and order, and that right was being trampled in the mud and mire. Never before did we look upon so pitiable a spectacle as was presented. It was enough to make a man turn with shame and sorrow from the view, and one could not but look with pity and sympathy at the actors in the drama. It acted upon the crowd of "Christians" (who filled the court room and sat in the jury box, and by their actions and expressions demonstrated plainly that they sustained the men who had trampled their hands in the blood of innocent, and that they stood by the actions of the mob. "There is no law in Georgia for Mormons." The courts of the State have sustained the mob and the issue could not be made plain. It is but simple justice to say that these men do not represent the thinking and intelligent part of the community, but are the ignorant and degraded, and are sustained by the religious bigotry of the orthodox part of the general community who are led blindly by their religious teachers. The liberal element are unsparring in their denunciation of the crime, and a heated discussion has been held to the effect that the mob will in the end result in great good to the cause of truth. The unvarnished blood of Joseph Standing cries from the ground for vengeance, and the people of the State of Georgia are to-day dark with the stains of the split blood of a martyr to the cause of truth; his history has a dark day to account for, and his executive and judicial officers will be called to account for the part they have taken in condoning the deed; his children will reap the bitter fruit of the deed, and the history of the State will be a record of shame. "Tough not make anointed and do not prophesy to me," has been the motto of the mob, and the children of men all the way down from Adam to-day. In his own due time he will call these men to an account, and will not hold the murderer guiltless. Joseph Standing's name will henceforth be enrolled among the martyrs, side by side with those whose blood has been shed for the cause of truth and the testimony of Jesus. His history will be penned by the youth of Zion, and the influence of his martyrdom will penetrate every land where the name of God is honored. The story of his life will attract the attention of the thoughtful of the world, and will become a household word to untold thousands of people. The story of his life will attract the attention of the thoughtful of the world, and will become a household word to untold thousands of people. The story of his life will attract the attention of the thoughtful of the world, and will become a household word to untold thousands of people.
