THE CREATION DANCE.

A CURIOUS CEREMONY PERFORMED BY THE REMNANT OF A ONCE POWERFUL TRIBE.

Adjutant General Kree is recognized as the best story teller to be found in the State house and almost every day a group of listeners may be seen at the headquarters of the State military department, listening with both ears to the interesting tales that fall from the lips of the popular official. Through his varied experience on the western border General Kree has gathered an apparently inexhaustible fund of information from which he is able to draw at a moment's notice.

Yesterday the general was in a story telling mood, and although he dislikes nothing so much as newspaper notoriety, a few choice selections from his repertoire will be ventured upon.

"It was about twenty years ago," said he, as his circle of listeners settled into the cushioned chairs and the smoke from half a dozen cigars began to climb toward the ceiling, "that my company was stationed at Fort Griffin, Texas. In the neighborhood of the fort lived the remnant of a tribe of Indians called the Toncoways. This tribe had once been a powerful body, but in a war with the Comanches the power of the tribe was completely broken and at the time of which I speak not more than 100 able-bodied warriors could be mustered for the grand buffalo hunt.

CREATION DANCE.

"One day a friendly Toncoway invited myself and several friends to witness the 'creation dance.' This was held but once a year and it was said we were the first white men ever permitted to be present during the ceremony. Shortly before noon we reached the Indian village and were ushered into a large tepee where the performance was to be held. The spectators sat on the ground, leaving an open space in the middle, like the ring of a circus. A narrow passage was kept open through which the dancers were admitted to the circle from a neighboring wigwam. The idea to be portrayed by the Indians was that a cantoom had imbedded itself in the earth from which the first warrior of the tribe originated. The sun was allowed to shine through a narrow aperture in the upper part of the tepee, striking the ground near the centre of the circle. Soon a number of squaws entered, and a representation of winter was given by scattering withered leaves and little bits of white paper in the air to imitate a fall of snow. Pretty soon from the adjoining wigwam the cries of wolves and coyotes were heard and a score of young bucks, clad in wolf-skins, came running into the circle upon all fours. The new comers set up the most uncarthly howls and barks, giving perfect imitations of the wolf and coyote. Did you ever hear a wolf howl?"

WOLF'S HOWL.

Receiving an answer in the negative, the story teller gave an imitation of the wolf's cry that fairly made the blood of his listeners run cold. Then he proceeded with his account of the creation act. After the wolves and coyotes had worked up the proper enthusiasm, they began to scratch furiously in the earth, stopping now and then to send up the unearthly sounds that were familiar to the ears of the pioneers of the West. All at once the grave diggers rushed into the opening they had made and lo and behold, they emerged bringing with them a live Toncoway, clad in all the gorgeous panoply of war. The red skin had previously been buried in a safe place to be resurrected by his brethren. The ceremony continued with the adoption of the stranger by the wolves.

Another incident was related by the general, illustrating the brutal nature of the Indian and the terrible dangers to which the white pioneers of the West were subjected. About forty miles from Fort Griffin lived a frontiersman with his wife and two charming daughters. The latter were handsome and bright girls, 16 and 18 years of age, and made a perceptible impression on the hearts of the soldiers, who were often attracted to the little cabin far away in the forest to enjoy the society of its inmates. There were bad Indians roaming through the different parts of Texas and the cavalrymen kept a sharp eye out in protection of the daring frontiersman and his family, but, unfortunately for them all, the garrison was ordered north on an expedition into Indian territory and strangers occupied the fort. After an absence of more than a month the former garrison was returned to Fort Griffin.

At the first opportunity a party of which General Kree was a member, rode out on a visit to their old friends. What was their horror at discovering that the cabin was burned to the ground and that the two girls had been carried away by the Indians. Near the charred and smouldering ruins of the cabin were found the mutilated bodies of the settler and his wife. The alarm was immediately sounded and the search begun for the missing girls. All the soldiers that could be spared from the post rode night and day in a vain effort to hunt down the savages, who numbered about thirty and were thoroughly mounted and strained every nerve to escape with their booty. The red men were successful and for six weeks no trace could be discovered of the captives. Rumors were heard, stating that the girls had been frightfully treated by the savage brutes and after weeks of untold suffering had been loaned for a month to a party of sixteen white teamsters, who were on their way to Santa Fe. Time passed and the poor unfortunates had been given up as dead, when a troop of cavalrymen came unexpectedly upon a body of Indians camping on the prairie. The soldiers charged so quickly that the Indians were obliged to leap upon their ponies and flee for their lives, leaving their entire camping outfit in the hands of the attacking party. Several covered wagons, which had been taken from emigrants, formed part of the paraphernalia, and in one of these wagons the lost captives were found. The once beautiful girls had become changed to mumbling imbeciles, beyond all hope of ever recovering their health or mental faculties. The delight which the soldiers took in hunting down the authors of this double outrage may be better imagined than described.

"The two girls were placed in the care of friendly Osages in Indian Territory and Congress a short time after passed an act granting a yearly pension of $1000 to each of the unfortunates."

BRAVERY IS COMMON.

The bravery of the soldier was a subject of conversation at the adjutant-general's office yesterday. One gentleman claimed that this quality is one of the most common of the human attributes and that but little credit is due to any man for gallantry on the field of battle. General Kree did not agree with the opinion. "Bravery is largely a matter of pride," said he. "It sometimes depends on the condition of the liver. The general then illustrated his assertion by a sketch of the remarkable career of Major Joseph Rendlebrock of the Fourth regular cavalry. This man was connected with the regular army for twenty-eight years and was considered as par excellence the bravest soldier in the army. At Resaca, during the great rebellion, General Lew Wallace rode up to the colonel of one of the regiments and directed that the regiment should move upon a concealed battery which was playing havoc with the Union ranks. The colonel expostulated with Gen. Wallace on the rashness of the undertaking and after both officers had reconnoitered the position they agreed that it was impregnable. Rendlebrock was then a sergeant of one of the companies of the regiment. Stepping forward he saluted his colonel, and said in broken English:

"Colonel, gif me twelf men and I'll yump 'em!"

The officer laughed in the face of the sergeant, but said:

"If you can get twelve volunteers, I have no objection."

To the complete astonishment of his superiors, the sergeant got the twelve volunteers and at the end of twenty minutes had captured the battery. From that time forward he was known as "Old Yump 'Em."

For this brave act he was made first lieutenant of his company on the field and on account of gallant conduct in later battles of the war was rapidly promoted until he was brevetted as major of his regiment. He knew no such word as fear. In July, 1879, Major Rendlebrook was retired from the army on a charge of cowardice. While on a campaign against the Sioux Indians, shortly after the Custer massacre, the major, who had won the plaudits of the entire army by his firmness in the presence of death, showed himself to be an abject coward. On account of his previous record he was permitted to resign, without being cashiered.—Denver News.

HE NEVER SMILED.

HE CARRIED AN EXTRA SEAT, WITH WHICH HE ACCOMMODATED THE PASSENGERS.

He came into a car on the Sixth Avenue L road at Twenty-third Street. It was Christmas eve, and everybody had at least one tumble. He had a chair, carefully and closely wrapped in soft brown paper. He looked around and saw that all the seats were taken. Then he made a motion as if he intended to sit down on the chair, but he seemed to think better of it, and he stood behind it, with his hands on the back, and rested himself that way.

At the next station a gentleman and a little girl came aboard.

"Let your little girl sit on this chair," said the man courteously. "She might just as well, and she won't hurt it."

This offer was gratefully accepted, and the little girl was lifted to a seat. Presently there came a sound of music into the car. It sounded as if it had come a long way in order to let the folks hear it on Christmas eve. It was a composition that had become popular at one time, called "Down Went McGinty," but it was inexpressibly sweet.

Soon those in the car began to realize that the music was right in that car, and at last, after the little girl had fidgeted about a lot, half of those in the car discovered the musical chair and began to laugh, while the other half rose from their seats and wondered what it was all about.

The man who owned the chair stood looking straight ahead with a calm face. The father finally began to laugh although he was at first inclined to be angry, and when they got out at Thirty-third street the little girl said goodby to the man with the chair.

There came into the car then a young man with a large cane, a small mustache, a big boutonniere and a pretty girl. They were all very swell.

The man with the chair bowed his prettiest and said to the young man:

"Your lady may sit down here, if she likes."

"Oh, thank you, thank you." They both spoke at once, and "his lady" sat down, while every passenger in the car leaned forward with an air of expectancy. The young man bent over his fair companion and said pretty things to her, while the face of the owner took on a stony stare.

Again came the music, far off at first, then drawing nearer and nearer until finally there was no mistaking its source. This time it was an old time jig tune. "Pretty Peggy."

At first the woman looked pleased; then, when she realized it all, she became confused. She moved about uneasily as if she would like to get away from the hidden spring, but the clog tune kept up and took on variations.

Her scorn bit his lip and looked at the owner of the chair as if he would like to fight, but he couldn't quite comprehend that stony stare. The passengers in the rear of the car heard the sound of suppressed laughter and left their seats to crowd forward. It wasn't at all polite, but the crowd did it. They roared with laughter, and then the guard shouted "Fiftieth Street!" The pair went off, both red in the face, and when at the next station the man with the musical chair and the stony stare went out he was cheered, but he never smiled.—Ex.

A PERSIAN PARABLE.

THE STORY OF KHAWAJAH AND KADIJAH, AND WHAT AMBITION BROUGHT THEM TO.

Khawajah was the stupidest man in all Ezroom. He had no enemies, so it was left to his friends to say of him: "A stupider head never carried a turban." Moreover, his wife said so, and who should know better than Kadijah? Now, Kadijah was as ambitious as woman ever was, and as sharp-tongued as she was ambitious. The one hope of her life was that her husband should become a priest, in order that she might be called "priestess." "But," he would say, "how can I become a priest? I don't know enough."

"Now, Allah protect your stupid pate," she would cry out, you can learn, can't you?" So he set himself diligently at his books, but it was hard work, and when the time for his ordination had come all he had learned was, "I had a chicken, my chicken flew up and then it flew down. Glory be to God."

"You see how stupid I am" said he to his wife in despair. But Kadijah encouraged him, saying, "But once become a priest and no one will mind what you say." So he was ordained and became a priest, and would stand up in his long robe, and holding up his arms would cry in a loud voice, over and over again, "I had a chicken, my chicken flew up and then it flew down again," and then he would say louder than before, "Glory be to God!" While all the people declared they had never had a priest who talked so truly and so wisely before.

Then Kadijah said to her husband in triumph, "What did I tell you?"

By and by the news came to Ezroom that the bishop was about to pay them a visit; then Khawajah was in despair, and said to Kadijah: "What shall I do?"

"Have no fear," answered his wife, "do as you have always done. Your people will protect you."

So the bishop came and sat in the congregation, while Khawajah held up his arms before the people and cried in a loud voice: "I had a chicken, my chicken flew up and then it flew down. Glory be to God."

Hearing these impious words, the Bishop rose and would have struck the priest for his impiety, but Khawajah appealed to his people, saying:

"Am I not your own priest? Have I not baptised your living and buried your dead?"

Then all the people rose up and said he was their own priest, and that he had baptised their living and buried their dead, and had spoken to them more truly than any other man, and, laying their hands on the Bishop, they put him out of the church, and would have slain him had not Khawajah interfered.

But the Bishop went back to the Council and told what severe things had happened to him in Ezroom, and the Council wondered how they should remove this wicked priest. Finally one Bishop rose and said: "I will undertake not only to punish him and put him out of his church, but also to bring you a hair plucked from his beard."

So the new Bishop, going to Ezroom, walked into the congregation, and when he heard Khawajah recite over and over again, "I had a chicken, my chicken flew up and then it flew down, Glory be to God," he rose and said:

"Truly, never did Priest speak so wisely as this Priest," and, putting forth his hand as he said these words, he plucked a hair from the Priest's beard. Now, this is the greatest indignity that can happen to one of this order, and so Khawajah, turning fiercely on the new Bishop, said: "How dare you touch my beard?"

"Because," answered the other calmly, putting the hair into a little box as he spoke, "the hair from the face of so good and so wise a man will surely carry blessings with it wherever it goes. I shall take this to other churches, that it may bring a blessing to them also."

Then all the people rose up and begged a hair from the beard of their priest, that it might bring them a blessing, and each one reverently plucked a hair from his face and departed. But when the last man had left, behold the face of Khawajah was as smooth as the face of a little child!

"Dog of an unbeliever," cried the Bishop, turning upon him as soon as they were alone, "how dare you thus profane this holy calling? Do you not know that a beardless man may not enter the priesthood?"

And laying violent hands upon him, he tore the robe from his figure. Khawajah called loudly upon his people, but they had all departed, and secure in their blessing, willingly chose another man in his place.

Then Kadijah said to him: "Now see what you have brought me to."—Evening Sun.

Salt Lake City, December 18th, 1890.

SUMMONS.

In the District Court in and for the Third Judicial District of Utah Territory, County of Salt Lake.

LIZZIE PURMAN, Plaintiff, vs. MACK S. PURMAN, Defendant. } Summons.

The People of the Territory of Utah send Greeting:

To Mack S. Purman, Defendant.

YOU ARE HEREBY REQUIRED TO appear in an action brought against you by the above named plaintiff in the District Court of the Third Judicial District of the Territory of Utah, and to answer the complaint filed therein within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served out of this county, but in this district, within twenty days; otherwise within forty days—or judgment by default will be taken against you according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to have a decree of this Court dissolving the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, and for such other and further relief in the premises as may be just and equitable. Above relief prayed on the grounds that for more than three years last past defendant has failed to provide for plaintiff the common necessaries of life not having contributed at all to her support during that time; and that plaintiff and defendant have not lived together as husband and wife for more than three years last past.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded there in.

Witness the Hon. Charles S. Zane, Judge, and the Seal of the District Court of the Third Judicial District, in and for the Territory of Utah, this 13th day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

[SEAL.] HENRY G. McMILLAN, Clerk.
