THE KATE FLINT AND CORA CONWAY SUITS. — The defendants in these two suits, brought to recover damages for the destruction of certain household goods, &c., filed their answer to the complaint with the clerk of the District Court to-day.

Jeter Clinton, one of the respondents, answers by denying the wanton and malicious destruction of the property of the plaintiffs by him, the property having been demolished in consequence of a writ of attachment issued by him to the City Marshal or any of his deputies, and that he had authority to do so, either by virtue of his office, or by a general order of the Peace, the plaintiffs having been adjudged guilty of keeping houses of ill fame, such places being, according to the ordinances of Salt Lake City, nuisances and subject to be abated.

Those who admit having taken part in the demolishing process answer that the property was demolished in a wanton, maliciously, but in due process of law, the following language occurring in their responses:

"We write a copy of which, with the endorsement thereon, is hereto attached and made a part of this answer, duly issued by one Jeter Clinton, and directed to the City Marshal or one of his deputies, which was then delivered to William McAllister such time as it was necessary to be executed, whereby he was commanded to forthwith proceed to and abate said nuisance, by demolishing all things found therein used for the purpose of ill fame, provided no expense of all kinds was provided by ordinance of Salt Lake City."

"That the said Jeter Clinton was then and there a Justice of the Peace and an American within, and for the time of all his services, a citizen of the State of Utah, Territory of Utah daily elected and qualified and acting as such."

WASH-KEE DEAD. — There have been rumors afloat, for the past few weeks, that Wash-kee, the Shoshone chief, had been killed in an affray with some member of his band; but until this morning, we have been unable to obtain any authentic information as to the truth or falsity of the rumor. The following particulars, for which we are indebted to Major D. B. Huntington, the well known Indian interpreter, of this city, will be read with regret by many of the residents of this Territory.

Wash-kee and his band, six or seven men, were encamped in the Wash River Valley, near to some soldiers. They gave him several drinks of whisky, which gave him great strength, and like most Indians, whether Indians or whites, when under its influence, he lost all control of himself.

The Indians, however, were engaged between Wash-kee and one of his men named Witch, and in his drunken fury Wash-kee was determined to fight it out. Witch, however, was away at the time; and Wash-kee, killing his horse and set fire to and burned up his lodge. The bands, seeing how matters were going, set off in the direction of women and children. In the meantime, Witch, who had recovered his property, he concealed himself near the edge of his village, his object being to shoot him as soon as he made his appearance. — It is said that he did not fire his weapon until the next morning, neither did Witch leave his post and as soon as the old chief came out, he concealed for shot him dead. Seven members of the band, including the old chief, commenced firing at the dead body, but he ran and dodged among them, keeping their fire until they were tired out, and their ammunition was spent, finally one of them, who was a good marksman, loaded his gun with a rifle bullet, this missile killed the slayer of Wash-kee.

Wash-kee had been well known by the white settlers of Utah for many years, and he has been one of their truest friends. His death will be generally regretted, as to his death there will be no power to restrain his hand from avengement of any kind to the whites. He was, however, a good man, and was, especially, a good Indian, but with all his better qualities, he had a weakness for fire water, and, like many other men, he is numbered among its victims. The conduct of the men who engaged in this affair, and their cynical indifference to the fate of their victim, in giving whisky to Wash-kee, was highly reprehensible, and if we mistake not they are amenable to the law, and it is to be hoped, if they can be discovered, that the punishment they will receive will be awarded them."

FATAL SHOOTING AT SPRINGVILLE. — We are indebted to Brother William Brannan, of Springville, for particulars of a fatal shooting affray, which took place at that place early on Wednesday morning. It appears that an old grudge existed between Charles Bolen and Bill Hall. Both parties attended a party on Tuesday night, when the old grudge was revived, and it is stated that Hall struck Bolen with a bottle. On the following morning, Wednesday, Hall took word to Bolen that he met him later in the street before night, and, on meeting Bolen, having become angry, struck him and cut him with a revolver. Bolen, in his defense, and in that of others, was shooting. When the latter, Bolen, was armed and a swar of his friends, he turned and bellowed, saying, "You're a pistol, but dare not shoot." Bolen then drew his pistol and shot Hall in the back, the bullet passing through the heart and lodging in the back. As soon as he was shot, Hall
