state capital, he says the scheme is nothing more than hot air, which will all thaust itself in talk. The state has expended $50,000 in a capitol building, and $50,000 in the executive mansion, all of which would have been thrown away were the capital site to be changed to some other city. Rock Springs, Lander, and Casper are in the field for the site of the permanent capital, but cannot command the support from over the state necessary to bring thou the consummation devoutly to be wished. When urged to announce the engage-ment, if it was so, to put an end to gossip, Miss Irwin looked up more seri-ously and said: "That is a subject upon which I feel that I cannot say one word. Speculators are especially interested in the move to change the state capital, and many axes are ready for the grind-stone, but it won't work. Mr. Deming holds that Cheyenne is the most easily leached commercial center in the state of Wyoming, and there the state capital will permanently remain. "No," she returned, shaking her head, "I have quite made up my mind that t will be safest for me to preserve the most complete reticence. Some time ago I resolved that my lips should be sealed. My determination upon that point is more absolute than ever."

GORE CANYON FIGHT. Funny Story Regarding Dam on Moffat

Line. The fight between the Moffat road and the New Century Light and Power company over the possession of Gore canyon, 150 miles west of Denver, has assumed an entirely new and alto-gether unlooked for aspect. The controversy dates back to the time when the Moffat road made its survey through that region, running directly across the disputed canyon. The powr company had previously filed on the land and fought the efforts of the road to cross at that place. The case was tried before a special government com-mission and the power company was victorious. The Moffat road management appealed, and pending a final hearing work of building a reservoir of the New Century company has been

In each year, the three R's and the United States government has its eye on the canyon for irrigation purposes, and that a survey has already been made by experts, looking into the adaptability of the location for the purpose desired. The government's scheme is a gigantic one, if reports be true. Rumor says that in the event of a favorable report by the surveyors, a mammoth dam will be constructed n the canyon, creating a reservoir of 1,500,600-acre feet. From this the water

A good sized audience was in attend-ance and the verdict over the "County Chairman" was of the whirlwind sort. People who knew that the original company is at this time playing in New York, were inclined to be dublous about the possible merits of a "No. 2" organization, but after seeing the Sait Lake company, they might well wonder whether this is not another case where "the first shall be the last and the last Manager Savage's boast is that his road company is never allowed to

Mr. Ade's play is the most faithful and humorous portrayal of real American character, which recent stage annals afford. He has all his own humor, some of Bill Nye's drollness, and a great deal of Hoyt's incisiveness, both in his characterization and his dialogue. The local coloring is admirable. One sees on the village hustings and around the village store, the types he has met, and can meet any day in any of the rural districts of our country, and all this wealth of characterization being employed in the delineation of a pretty love story, is to the last degree fascinating, healthy and enjoyable.

Mr. Roberts, an old friend, he who was selected to succeed the lamented Mayo, in the part of "Puddin'head Wilson," never had anything better suited to his talents than the part of the keen village politician. Jim Hackler. He had several enthusiastic curtain calls after several enthusiastic curtain calls after his strong acting at the end of the third act. Many of the best judges say that Mr. Maclyn Arbuckie, the New York original, falls several points below Roberts in this scene. George Thatcher in the part of the village vagabond darkey, who sells his vote to every bidder, has one of those quiet, deliciously droll parts which he long ago made famous in minstrel annals. He is an entire team in himself, and how any original could excel him, one fails to understand. The play is crowded with excellent bits of character work, among the best delineations being the young cellent bits of character work, among the best delineations being the young lawyer of Mr. Lamp, the Briscoe of Mr. Bradbury, the exquisite old man character of Mr. Burke, the drummer of Mr. Phillips, the sweet little heroine of Miss Smythe, and the thoroughly artistic milliner of Miss Williams, Miss Photolegy of Miss Smythe, and the thoroughly artistic milliner of Miss Williams, Miss Photolegy of Miss Photolegy of Miss Williams, Miss Wil Florida Kingsley, whom we all remember as the wife of Wright Huntington in the Grand stock days, did a clever bit as the orphan "Chic."
