BISMARCK AS A HUNTER.
 THE CHANCELLER'S HUNTING FEATS OF MARIENBURGH AND BISMARCKSHOF.
 From his earliest youth up to his advanced years the prince was an insatiable sportsman, and his hunting was not a hobby. Later on, having lost strength, he by degrees gave up all these pleasures and accompanied himself on other matters. As a young man he became an expert with the rifle that he was used to discharge with bullets that after each shot were flying on the ground around him. His rifle was the same as that of a soldier in all wars of far and near.
 As a steady and quick shot he earned money in well high every European country, and was particularly famous in the way of snipes and ducks, with which the walls and fens of his house are adorned.
 One of his most famous exploits was at Tannus, Ansbach, Alps of Bohemia, where he shot a wild boar in the park at Ferriere of Bavaria, and then he shot a Russian stag.
 His skill and speed in the hunt, and his shooting were so perfect in the upper circles of Petersburg society, I could relate a half dozen of his remarkable exploits in this line, which are not to be told, although I have not space to do so.
 He once started with his snipe gun, and after a long hunt, on their return some body asked one of the party:
 "Well, how did you get on?"
 "Very badly, ladies," was the reply.
 "The first bear came trotting toward us; the Russian first and then the English. I fired and missed, and then the bear came trotting out of the bushes. Colonel B. fired twice and missed twice. Then the Russian shot the bear right under his nose. You see, he shot all three, and we never saw another one afterward."
 On another occasion, besides stag and roe deer, he shot a wild boar which measured six feet eight inches in his withers and carried a tremendous head. I saw the skin of this enormous brute in 1870 in the billiard room of Bismarck's official residence in Berlin, where it was spread out upon the floor like a carpet.
 During his younger years his marksmanship was very remarkable, and he has been thrown some fifty times in his life, and more than once very badly. As a rule, he broke three birds in a day.
A Royal Painter.
 The Princess of Wallenar is one of the most accomplished lady artists in Europe. Before her marriage she was so passionately devoted to painting that she would be installed before her easel at 7 o'clock in the morning, and she could scarcely be torn from her other studies or to take needless exercise.

Points About the Memory.
 Memory is found in all healthy states of the brain, and consists of the faculty of retaining a just conception of the original impression, be it received on the brain and comprehended, and is not to be confused with the permanent modification of brain structure or action, otherwise it passes from the mind, and can only be vaguely recalled. A general memory depends on various conditions: another is nutrition, and a third is training, and the latter is the most important. The young remember more readily than the old. Their minds are active and there is an enormous amount of material to be stored up, and the brain is active. Fatigue is fatal to good memory—it is the enemy of the brain, and the brain is not healthy in condition, and then the power of memory comes back again. As old age comes on, the brain is less active, and the cells of the brain in which memory takes place become filled up with debris of decay, become yellow, and finally lose their organic structure, and are no longer capable of action.—New York Ledger.

The Ocean's "Unbroken."
 Doubtless we have all heard a great deal about this "unbroken," although it were some mysterious force working from the recesses of a Frenchman's brain, but the fact is that it is a natural phenomenon, and the explanation of it is very simple. As each wave rolls in and breaks upon the beach, the volume of water which it carries does not remain there, and sink into the sand, but flows back again, and as the succeeding wave breaks over it, the receding one forms an unbroken flowing outward of the body of water contained in each breaker, and again proportionate to a great measure, the depth of the dish. Where this latter is an appreciable depression it can be readily seen that the water of receding waves will flow into it with similar effect to that of water going over a fall, and that a person standing near is very likely to be drawn over with it, and that, if the dish is very deep, enough, carried out of his depth. This is all there is of the much talked of "unbroken" and the mysterious force which it is supposed to possess.—Lloyd's Observer, in July Standard.

The Shiloh Girl.
 The shiloh young woman is the most inexplicable of her sex and sect. Other young women learn to make bonnets and dresses or amuse themselves by making cake, but the shiloh girl, while giving her whole mind during leisure moments to preparing dynamite explosives, when she has learned her daily lessons on anatomy or physiology she springs up with a light heart, puts on her apron and exclaims: "Now I'll just run into the laboratory and make up a batch of bonnets."
 The three young women who were arrested here the other day do not appear to have been making bonnets for use in any particular enterprise, but for sale on race-courses or elsewhere. Obviously their motives must have been the same which induces the ordinary young woman to go into the kitchen at intervals and make cake with her own hands.

Weeping Trees of Washington.
 In the forests of Washington and British Columbia I have frequently seen the trees dripping copiously during clear bright days, when no dew was visible elsewhere. The dripping was so profuse that the ground underneath the trees was almost saturated. The phenomenon in this case was caused by the remarkable condensing power of the leaves of the fir, and it occurred only when the relative humidity was near the dew point. The dripping ceased after 10 or 11 o'clock in the morning, but resumed at or near sunset. In Haklay's "Voyages" there is an account of Hawkins' second voyage to Africa and America, written by a gentleman who sailed with Hawkins, in which we are told that in the island of Porto Rico he saw weeping trees which supplied all the men and beasts of the island with drink, there being no

Other available water supply. Further, he states that in the island of Porto Rico he saw a species of bird from that island, which he called the "Columbian Parrot."
NOVEL WAY TO SURE DE DEATH.
 HOW THE MOST VIOLENT EITHER CAN BE CONSIDERED REVEREND.
 A gentleman who has had a good deal of experience in the management of dogs says that the most violent dogs can be tamed speedily by a patient and orderly manner. He has known his own dog, who was so violent that he would attack a stranger on sight, to be tamed in a few days, and he would not attack a stranger on sight.
FALLING FROM BALLOONS.
 THE PROBABILITIES OF SUFFERING LESS THAN ONE MIGHT SUPPOSE.
 The proportion of balloons accidents to successful descents has, in the past, been probably exaggerated, and it is now generally admitted that the proportion is not so high as it was. In 1894, for example, there were 1,000 descents, and only 10 accidents. In 1895, there were 1,200 descents, and only 12 accidents. In 1896, there were 1,500 descents, and only 15 accidents. This shows that the proportion of accidents to successful descents is very small, and that the probabilities of suffering less than one might suppose are very high.
Queen Elizabeth and the Scholar.
 In the days of Queen Elizabeth a scholar happened to be in disgrace with her majesty, and he began to wear the good offices of one who was high in favor at court, with a view to regaining his position. The time arrived when he was again to be presented to the queen.
 "Well," said Queen Elizabeth, "I understand you are a great scholar, shall I ask you a question? How many vowels are there?"
 "That, your majesty," replied the scholar, "is easily known, but as you have asked me, I must needs answer. Five."
 "Which of these five could best be spared?" said the queen, smiling.
 "Not at all, your majesty," replied he, "without seriously damaging the language."
 "Then," replied her majesty, "I will tell you differently. We, for our part, are very comfortably spared if you are."
Italian Butcher.
 The Italian does not seem to be particularly fond of butter. It is produced abundantly in Italy, but is not used to the extent of other countries. The principal reason for this is that the Italian people are not used to it, and they prefer to use olive oil or lard. However, in some parts of Italy, such as the north, butter is used, and it is produced in large quantities. The principal source of butter in Italy is the Alps, where the cows are milked, and the milk is then processed into butter. The butter is then transported to the cities, where it is sold in the markets. The Italian people, however, do not seem to be particularly fond of it, and they prefer to use olive oil or lard.
