An Atlas, like a gazetteer or directory, in order to meet the demands of its patrons, must be comprehensive and accurate, and contain the very latest official information. Such is claimed for Gaskell's new Family Atlas of the world, the whole being brought down to September, 1856, and contains a greater amount of information, geo graphical, historical, statistical an descriptive, thas any similar publica tion. As a family atlas and for general reference, it has no rival, because the latest, and embodies the best of al similar works. It gives the names and location of 20,000 towns and vilages, and 5,000 post offices, not found in similar publications. It is the most complete post office gazetteer of the United States, and the only one of Canada ever published. It shows 3,000 miles of railroad and 3,000 new railroad stations, built since Jinnary 1st, 1886. It shows twenty-seven new counties in various states. It contains the cen-sus of 1885 in thirteen states, and all railroad staticus, telegraph, express, post and money order offices carefully indexed.
