Another day's fighting north of the Colorado River, and the result is a complete victory for the United States. The Mexican forces, which were estimated at 10,000 men, were completely routed and fled in all directions. The United States forces, which were estimated at 5,000 men, pursued them for miles and captured a large amount of booty, including arms, ammunition, and supplies. The victory was a decisive one and has greatly strengthened the position of the United States in the region.

BAIRD ARTHUR H. LEWIS'S MONITOR.
 The Colorado River, which flows northward from the Mexican border, is a most interesting and important feature of the region.
