

OGDEN.

OGDEN, UTAH. - AUGUST 28, 1894.

BUX OVER BY A TRAIN.

A Man Found on the R. G. W. Train
Refused to State His Name or Know He Was Hurt.

About half past 4 o'clock this morning a man was found on the side of the Rio Grande Western train about a half mile east of town. The man was nearly unconscious, out of shape and had cut off the other foot.

The man refuses to give his name or any account of himself. It is not known which train ran over him or any particulars as to how the accident occurred.

C. G. Middleton, whose residence is close by, heard him groaning and went out and made him in the condition described. He was taken to the hospital.

Chief Captured.

When the news came down last night a man carrying a coat over his arm went into the store and immediately turned and came out, and to indicate he had been hit very badly.

The man carried nothing but a pocket knife, a small amount of money, as well as three checks to which it was believed.

"An investigation will take place at once," said Mr. C. G. Middleton, "but I don't know as far as the man's identity has right now with him, but I am in sympathy with the policeman who pretended he had been bitten, he went to the hotel. The Jew had just returned to his apartment."

"Open I think it is the case," said Mr. C. G. Middleton, "as we know the driver of the Jew's team. The Jew opened it himself, but the moment he saw the police his color changed, a horrible look of despair and rage came over his face, and he quickly sprang from the door to his truck."

The police were outside in the room before there was the report of a pistol shot, and the Jew fell dead on the floor. He had fired a bullet through his heart.

The police supposed that the Jew had done this to avoid being arrested for robbery. They examined at once for the cause, which was soon found and immediately forwarded.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

Court Items.

In the Fourth district court Judge Smith will occupy the bench today while Judge W. H. King will hold court at noon.

John M. Tamm returned from a two week vacation.

Mr. James T. Smith succeeds Mr. G. Garrett as local reporter of the Fourth district court.

Bereman Resigns.

Judge Bereman has resigned his office as administrator of accounts. Professor T. B. Lewis and N. L. Nelson are the leading candidates for the office.

Notes.

The board of education elected Miss Cawell music and drawing teacher for the coming school year at a salary of $10 per month.

On September 1 a new time card will go into effect on the Union Pacific.

It Was His Money.

The Jews in Russia are all very much alike, for the most part small, are only separated from each other by a thin partition.

Now, it happened that during the time when the Russian Jews had to travel to a town on an important mission, he went up at the same time every day, went out and returned home exactly at the same hour. This punctuality seemed very strange to him, and he made use of the spy system which is common in Russia.

He soon learned that his neighbor was a Jew, and by looking through the key-hole, he observed how the Jew, every time he went out or came in, drew a chain under the bed and put it around his neck.

Then he looked around timidly and anxiously to see if any one was listening, or by watching him, slowly unfastened the chain with a little key, took a second and smaller chain out of the first, and out of the second yet a third.

Into this last the Jew looked with such an eager gaze and sweet smile that the constable supposed it must indicate that he was very poor, perhaps the whole of the few rubles he had.

The Jew's hands at last followed his looks, and after a long search he drew out a carefully wrapped-up packet of brand new bank notes. The chest plainly contained papers of great value.

Day after day did the Russian constable observe these proceedings. The immense wealth of Jew was always being taken before his eyes.

"This is the only sum I suppose shall suffice," he said to himself. "I suppose I care for a Jew if I can only get his money? It is how shall I manage it? Ah, I know, and I want to see the first person here."

"Police officer," he said, "I have been terribly ruined—since all my property has been taken from me."

"What do I hear?" said the officer in amazement. "Have you any traps or snares so to win this bold thief?"

"Not suspicion only," said the Russian; "it is certainly a Jew, my neighbor in the hotel. He must be right, while I was not, have got through the door which Judah, the Jew, had not got through. I have got all the paper money, as well as three checks to which it was attached."

"An investigation will take place at once," said Mr. C. G. Middleton, "but I don't know as far as the man's identity has right now with him, but I am in sympathy with the policeman who pretended he had been bitten, he went to the hotel. The Jew had just returned to his apartment."

"Open I think it is the case," said Mr. C. G. Middleton, "as we know the driver of the Jew's team. The Jew opened it himself, but the moment he saw the police his color changed, a horrible look of despair and rage came over his face, and he quickly sprang from the door to his truck."

The police were outside in the room before there was the report of a pistol shot, and the Jew fell dead on the floor. He had fired a bullet through his heart.

The police supposed that the Jew had done this to avoid being arrested for robbery. They examined at once for the cause, which was soon found and immediately forwarded.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."

"Are you quite sure that these bank notes are your property?"

"How can you doubt it?" replied the constable, surprised. "Certainly, they are my property."

"I am sorry to say that I am not." "Well," said the police officer, suddenly, "now I arrest you in the name of the law, but the case is dropped."

The policeman continued slowly, "The all he has done for the Jew has fallen into himself."

He was condemned in later life for the murder of others.

On examination of the body the facts of the police officer suddenly assumed a more expressive.

"It was an unusual cheerful

man. And, certainly, the poison had not been administered with care."