It is possible that in the winding up of the affairs of the estate, and their anxiety to render justice to all claimants, the Executors may have overlooked some trivial legal tech-nicalities. We do not know that they have, but considering the ex-tent and value of the property har-died, and the peculiar cir-ctimstances surrounding the ex-tate, such may have been the

Boreman calls the transfer of this property to the Church in conformity with the command of the tests tor, "a wanton and reckless wast of the estate of the deceased," tlement with the Church they would have been derelict to their duty and be liable to suit on their bonds, would have been condemned alike by "Mormons" and non-"Mormons," and would have exposed the estate to proceedings for the recovery of the property which no one doubts belonged of right to the Church.

oreman further assails the Executors without reason in stating that "they made these transfers from the estate themselves and in fact the governor is less solicite took money out of the estate with- ous for the in out even giving their notes, but simply charging the same to "self."
