EDITORIAL NOTES.

From the Washington Star of the 16th inst., we learn that the Reynolds polygamy case on appeal, which was set for the 15th inst., was postponed until the 14th of November.

Edison has gone far enough in his experiments with the electric light to make the great gas companies of eastern cities exceedingly uneasy. If he succeeds in subdividing the electric light so as to make it available for business and domestic use, distributing, as he claims, a light cheaper, clearer, steadier and less injurious to the eyes than gas-light, the gas companies will have to go out of business or change over to the new method of illumination.

There is a brave boy at Delaware City. A few days ago, a little child, in consequence of the breaking of a rotten board, fell down a well forty-five feet deep, at that place. Frederick Hiltz, who was standing by, immediately pulled off another plank, threw his arms around the pump stock, and slipped rapidly down to the water, grasped the child as it was sinking for the third time, and though the water was very deep, succeeded in holding himself, as well as the child, above it until ropes were lowered to him, by which he was safely drawn out. The child is less than three years old, and, strange to say, escaped injury save a few scratches. The boy's heroism and presence of mind in his successful efforts to save the child deserve universal commendation.

The New York Herald of the 13th inst., contains twelve columns filled with accounts of murders. Commenting on this, that paper says: "Only a thorough study of the statistics of crime can determine whether murders are now greatly more numerous year by year than they were formerly, or whether we have our murders for a given period in a few groups, with intervals of quiet; but in so far as general impressions on the subject may be trusted, the murders reported are two or three to one against earlier periods, and there are no intervals." As reasons for this lamentable condition of things the Herald advances those: "Immunity for murderers in one cause, an entire loss of religious convictions in a great part of the social mass is another cause, and a third is the failure of society to discriminate against families prone to take violent steps in differences with their neighbors."

THE BILLINGS MURDER CASE.
The Billings trial, which has been a subject of great public interest in the east for several weeks, came to a conclusion on the 14th inst. As it will be numbered among the remarkable criminal cases of the times, we briefly relate its chief incidents, for the benefit of those who have not access to the leading eastern journals, which have fully chronicled the history of the case and the progress of the trial.

On the evening of the 4th of last June, Mary Eliza Billings, wife of Jesse Billings, Jr., while sitting in company with her daughter Jennie and the hired girl, Maggie Mahoney, in her own house in the town of Northumberland, New York, was shot in the head with a gun or pistol, by some person outside the house, the ball passing through a pane of window glass, crushing through her skull and lodging in the brain. She died instantly, without a cry and without falling from the chair. Her husband was informed of the occurrence less than half an hour afterward, at the house of Mr. Washburne, five-sixths of a mile distant, and rode home manifesting great grief. But his daughter Jennie at once used expressions indicating her suspicion that he was the murderer. Several circumstances combined to create an unfavorable impression towards Mr. Billings, and he was finally arrested and tried for the crime, at Ballston.

The defendant is a prosperous business man and banker, and is the son of Dr. Jesse Billings, a respectable and opulent physician of the old school. His wife was the daughter of Mr. Harris, a well-to-do trader, and all the parties are well connected and well known in their neighborhood. The marriage was an unhappy one. Mrs. Billings was one of those jealous, suspicious women who magnify the trifles into monstrous proofs of guilt, and led her husband on a awful life in consequence. Her chief object of jealousy was a Mrs. Curtis, who, with her husband, Mr. Curtis, occupied rooms in the bank building, which she kept in order. Mrs. Billings had twice accused her husband of attempting to destroy her, first by chloroform while she was in bed, and the other time by trying to burn the house. But it appears that in the first instance Mr. Billings was using some chloroform for the toothache, which troubled him, and on the other occasion upset a lamp by which the skirting board of the room was burned.

But Mrs. Billings had managed to impress the mind of her daughter Jennie with the belief that her father was unfaithful to his marriage vows, and desired to get rid of her, and Mrs. Harris, the mother-in-law, a vineyard old lady, joined heartily in the accusations. Jennie had become engaged, unknown to her father, to a clerk Sherman, and on this fact becoming known, Mr. Billings discharged the young man, who became an ally of those who incited the prosecution.

The case against the prisoner was as follows: Tracks were traced outside the house after the murder, made by some one wearing rubber boots, which Mr. Billings admitted having on that evening. Tracks of a horse and wagon were also discovered along the river side leading to Washburn's. A carbine was found in a well adjacent, said to belong to Mr. Billings, and containing the shell of a discharged cartridge. These facts, added to the motive found in Mr. Billings' unhappy relations with his wife, his suspected intimacy with Mrs. Curtis and former alleged attempts to rid himself of an uncongenial partner, made a chain of circumstantial evidence against him very difficult to break.

He accounted for his tracks by showing that he had gone from the house on the evening of the murder into a field near by to salt some cattle—traces of the salting being found next day—and for the horse and wagon tracks by his visit to Washburn's where he heard of the murder. The gun, he declared he had not seen for several months. He accounted the idea of an improper relation with Mrs. Curtis, that lady's husband joining him in his statements.

The trial lasted from September 18th to October 14th, and was characterized by intense bitterness on the part of N. C. Moak, of Albany, one of the counsel for the prosecution, by the spectacle of the prisoner's daughter siding, all that was in her power, to fasten the crime upon her own father, who had always been kind and indulgent to her, and by the manner in which she was supported by her lover and mother-in-law. The inner life at the Billings house was shown up with disgusting detail; it was shown that Billings could have perpetrated the murder and reached Washburn's with ease by the time stated, and the circumstances of the tracks and the gun were brought up in startling prominence by the four able lawyers who were retained to assist the District Attorney.

But the defense showed that on the night of the murder Jennie declared she saw a man in grey clothes run across the street and hide in a wood pile, which she repeated until stopped by Mrs. Harris. Several witnesses testified to seeing a man of this description, and bareheaded, running away just after the shot, and a hat was picked up near the wood pile and produced in court. The shot was fired between 8:30 and 8:50 p.m., according to the testimony of numerous witnesses, whose watches and clocks were to have differed as usual. At 9:03 Mr. Billings left the Washburn House to return home. One of the Washburns declared he reached there at 8:40, and a man named Jones swore he was in the boat on the river, and saw the prisoner tie up his horse outside Washburn's house a few minutes before the shot was heard. Experts were also examined in regard to the bullet which was extracted from the murdered woman's head, and which, if fired from the Billings gun, originally weighed 220 grains, but was found to weigh only 165 grains, and it was contended that it should not have lost more than ten grains in the passage through the glass and the skull. It was therefore claimed by the defense to be a pistol shot and not a carbine ball.

The prosecution threw doubt and did on the witnesses for the defense, and brought forward the persons who loaned Jones the boat he claimed to have had on the night of the murder, who declared he did not have a flatter three weeks before that date.

The utmost acrimony was displayed by the prosecution, principally by Mr. Moak, and "lying and perjury" were freely charged by him against the defense, including the attorneys, of whom General Hughes was the chief. A very important charge was given by Judge Landon, and the jury, after being locked up from the 11th to the 14th inst., failed to agree and were discharged, standing eleven for acquittal and one for conviction, the juror who would have hung Mr. Billings if it had not been for those eleven obstinate fellows, and who bears the ominous name of Blood, declaring that his mind was made up by the strong plea of Mr. Moak.

Mr. Billings was remanded to jail, much to the joy of the Harris, but it is expected that ball will be accepted, and it is very doubtful if the case will ever again be brought to trial. Previous to the conclusion, Mr. Billings, it is said, made his will, leaving his property to his daughter, notwithstanding her course towards him. In contrast to the heartlessness of his child was the fidelity of his father, who, 85 years old, attended to the cases under his care and then rode to the court room every day, sustaining his son by his presence, counsel and encouragement.

It is probable that the question, Who killed Mrs. Billings? will never be fully answered until that great day when "the things done in secret will be revealed upon the housetops," when the earth and the sea shall give up their dead, and all shall be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

(For the Evening News.)
A POLICY.
To have individually a well defined policy in life is considered a privilege. To persistently follow after that ideal is an almost certain guarantee of success. Even when the end aimed at is not admired, there is respect for the pluck and indomitable will which give testimony to the earnestness of the pursuing mind.

The sorrows of a man without this anticipated or prospective end, are as a rule, frittered away; misdirected ability results in failure, and the end is often a wasted life; anticipations unrealized, prospects clouded and hopes blighted because such were predicated upon unknown quantities, and called for unknown qualities.

A community life as amenable to this law of success as the individual life is the ideal of the modern world.

New York, 22.—The Tribune's Washington special says: It is probable the question of the Halifax award will be reviewed this winter. Whatever may be done about the alternate payment of the money, the claim made by those who have been examining the subject is, that taking the British bill of particulars exactly as it was submitted, it shows the Canadians are entitled to only $125,000 annually, or to an aggregate of $1,250,000 for ten years. This is less than $1,500,000 instead of $2,000,000, the amount of the Halifax award, and against this it is claimed that it would be to deduct the special duties on fish and fish oil remitted by the United States for Canada. This item of itself would amount, in the ten years, to $3,000,000. That would make a statement, from the British commission figures, of $1,500,000 in favor of the United States instead of $5,000,000 in favor of Great Britain. The gentlemen connected with this business will, undoubtedly, be called upon to explain their conduct.

When these are founder of the Commonwealth of England, Oliver Cromwell, declared that wherever the English flag floated he would make the name of England and the person of an Englishman respected, he touched a string which vibrates yet in the Foreign Office of that mighty nation, and gives that assurance and confidence which made her the mistress of the seas and, for many an age, the workshop of the world.

When President Andy Johnson used that oft-repeated phrase, "My policy," he waked the embryo of a patriotism which might, under stateimanic direction, have been turned to a living flame, one which transmitting "my" to "our," would have preserved the Republic from its civil war, and baptized into unity the then discordant elements of a nation's power.

Among the notable illustrations of an unqualified and determined policy, the Catholic church is prominent; to procure the universality of its marvelous organization it has touched every fibre of the human heart, ministering to every passion, ministering to every latent want, ministering to all human need, grasping the life that now is, and that which is to come. Its votaries and converts have become devotees, while general life and regeneration of ecclesiastical authority divorced from common life and wedded to the church, as they passed away, have handed down to their successors the obligations they received, to give currency to the policy of the church which was asserted and believed to be divine. The wilds of every island and continent, and the atmosphere of every court and kingdom have been the arenas for such exhibitions of patient propaganda and subtlety of missionary effort as are matchless in history and unexampled in modern times.

These historic illustrations challenge men's sympathies and command their respect; though they may not share with the Puritans or bow at the altar of the Mother Church; and this devotion, patriotic and self-denying, springing from an implanted though perpetuated instinct, may, with the increase of intelligence and a higher inspiration, bear the grandest results in the present, and hand these down with increasing force and magnitude, until humanity at large shall bask beneath the fulness of blessing, comprehended in their original and incalculable by a very limited, yet favored few.

Similar elements and characteristics certainly exist in connection with the community dwelling in these mountains, or to speak more closely with those composing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, not probably with every individual allied with that Church, but as an organization it possesses a policy, it has a programme, it looks for results. If expediency has ever been its method, it only "stooped to conquer." The original mission of the church is to evangelize the world, and its early days, have never been modified, save where plainly transitory; its claims have never been altered, its divine origin, its priestly authority, its saving graces, its lofty aims, have not yet been denied, cancelled or withdrawn.
