

was said the Mormons were expected to build a grand Temple in Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, and hoped that they would do so, and would build up the country, for surely they had redeemed the Utah desert and performed wonders; also that the people in Missouri had changed their feelings in regard to the Mormons.

The settlement of Manassa, at which we soon arrived, is among the wonders of the day. About 2,000 people are located there, and although the altitude is 7,600 feet, wheat, oats, barley and potatoes are raised abundantly, some farmers raising 2,000 to 3,000 bushels of grain; fruits, molasses and other commodities are brought to Manassa in exchange for grain and potatoes. This is a large and lovely valley, capable of sustaining tens of thousands of inhabitants. After a splendid two days' conference, Saturday and Sunday, and a Seventies' meeting. Carriages conveyed us over an eight-mile ride through a continuation of fields to Sanford, one of the most beautiful countries that could be desired. The water supply is grand and the water is excellent. Doubtless our settlement will extend largely over those vast plains, for millions of acres are awaiting occupants.

It is 110 miles from Salda to Manassa. Today we start south on the railroad, having enjoyed a splendid meeting last evening; the church was packed to its utmost capacity and profound attention was given.

EDWARD STEVENSON.

LORENZO DOW YOUNG.

Today, Nov. 21, Patriarch Lorenzo Dow Young, brother of the late President Brigham Young, breathed his last at his home in this city. He has been quite feeble since the 1st of September last, and several times his death has been anticipated. When at last it came it was peaceful. The deceased was born Oct. 19, 1807, in Smyrna, Seneca county, New York, and was the son of John and Nabbie Howe Young. He was one of the original Utah Pioneers.

In his infancy, Lorenzo Dow Young was a feeble child, and as a boy he was far from being physically strong. His mother died when he was between seven and eight years old. At ten he became apprentice to a gardener and nurseryman, who required him to work beyond his strength. At seventeen he went to learn the blacksmith's trade where he met with an accident that almost rendered him a cripple for life; from this, however, he recovered. It was in 1832 that he read the Book of Mormon, and on investigation was convinced of the truth of the Gospel revealed through the Prophet Joseph Smith, being baptized in September of that year. He gathered with the Church, and in 1833 went on a mission to the state of New York. In 1836 he filled a mission in western Ohio, followed by another in New York. From Kirtland he moved to Missouri, from where he was driven with the Saints in 1838; going to Scott county, he remained there till 1841. He was at the battle of Crooked River, where Elder David W. Patten was killed.

In 1844 he filled another mission to Ohio; and in 1846 was one of those in the Mormon exodus from Nauvoo. With his family he passed through the severe privations of that period, and on April 7, 1847, left Winter Quarters with the Utah Pioneers under President Brigham Young. Lorenzo brought with him one cow—the only cow in the company, and the first ever known to come into the Great Salt Lake Valley.

Lorenzo's first labor in the valley was taking out a little water in an irrigation ditch and planting a bushel of potatoes he had brought from Winter Quarters; they were badly dried up and only fourteen hills grew. The frost coming on, he cut up a wagon box, made some boxes, and took up his potatoes, hills and all and took them into the house, where he left them growing till colder weather came, and they had grown to the size of hickory nuts. He then dug them, and next spring had one quart left for seed, one-half of which he gave away, and raising over two bushels from the remainder.

Brother Lorenzo assisted to build the Old Fort, on the site of the Pioneer Square, and erected a house thereon. He next built a house—the first erected in the valley outside of the Old Fort—on the site of the present Bee Hive house, near the corner of South Temple and State streets. Very many interesting incidents of his experience could be related if space therefor were available. He has been an active worker, holding various positions of importance. He was of a hospitable, generous nature, and delighted in aiding those who were in need. During his long life he was highly esteemed by the people, and now passes to an honored grave.

Lorenzo D. Young was the youngest member of a most remarkable family in the Church in one particular. The family consisted of the father and mother, the late John Young and his wife Nabbie Howe Young, five sons and five daughters, all of whom were married when the Gospel reached them, and they and their wives and husbands—twenty-one in the family, all joined the Church. There was one son by another wife, the late Edward Young, who also joined the Church.

The date of the funeral has not been fixed, but will be announced later.
