DRESSY ETON IN FUR.

A splendid idea for remodeling the old fur jacket is illustrated in this dressy eton for wear with the afternoon or calling gown. A beautiful, soft beaver is used in combination with ermine and hand-wrought Roman embroideries. The cut is plain and simple, as in all fur garments, fitting the figure snugly to the waist-line. The front is cut single-breasted, having a vest of ermine (without the tails) and beaver alternately arranged and edged with hand embroideries in dull greens and blues with many gold threads, exactly matching the back. The full leg-of-mutton sleeve is split from shoulder to elbow and here is inserted the ermine, the edges of the beaver cut in scallops under which are set the heavy embroideries. A very broad shoulder effect is given by the square sailor collar effect arranged over the shoulders and graduating in width to the waist-line in front, there to be fastened with two large blue and green enamel buttons mounted in silver rims. The large pillow muff is likewise of the beaver, while the chapeau is one of those fascinating lace turbans banded with black velvet ribbon and finished at the left side front with blush pink roses and foliage.

In Woman's World.

The great vogue of the elbow sleeve promises to continue through the season, and possibly longer. Long gloves are, therefore, among the necessities of life. Many women find difficulty in keeping these gloves from slipping down the arm, and there is on the market a sort of an arm garter of half-inch elastic covered with shirred ribbon and trimmed with frills of lace. These do not show, of course. A simple device is a narrow bar elastic sewn invisibly in the arm end of the glove. It need not be very tight, if the gloves are put on before the wrist there is practically no danger of the gloves slipping, but this plan presupposes the presence of a dressing maid or some assistant. Gloves match the costume whenever possible, but the difficulty of exactly matching all shades has kept white and black gloves in fashion. For street wear nothing is better than tan gloves. One may take her choice between one clasp or two in short gloves, both being in good waist is perhaps the most interesting of the season's fashions.

An authority on the laundering says that hot water should not be used in washing fine table linen or embroidered doilies. Cold water, white soap and borax, if not a borax soap, should be used instead. One wonders if all stains could be removed with cold water. Certainly every housewife has at times had difficulty in laundering table linen satisfactorily.

At this time, when it is not always possible to furnish the table with fresh lettuce, often the question of price comes in also, lettuce being very dear at times. There are dozens of good salads which are comparatively inexpensive, and which contain all the good qualities of the costliest. One of these is made of beets and Bermuda onions. Three good-sized beets should be boiled until tender. Drain them into cold water, run off the skins, and cut them into julienne slices. Slice two medium-sized or one large Bermuda onion into the same bowl. Sprinkle with salt and pour over a little vinegar. Let them stand in the refrigerator for an hour or more. Drain them, and mix the beets and onions together in a salad bowl. Serve with a French dressing, and sprinkle paprika liberally over the top. The salad is the prettier for being served on lettuce leaves, but this is not necessary to make it extremely palatable.

Bermuda onion and watercress makes a good combination either in a salad or sandwich. The addition of a little horse radish gives an extra flavor to the combination. When the onion figures in a sandwich, scrape or mince it. In the salad slices are better.

A cabbage salad, if delicately made, is very good indeed, and is also very cheap. Chop the cabbage fine, almost to a pulp, in fact, and mix with it a few blanched walnut meats. Mix with a good mayonnaise and serve on the tenderest of cabbage leaves. Sprinkle thickly with paprika.

The folding bed may once have been a necessary evil, but if stories of recent inventions are true, we shall soon dispense with those hideous contrivances, which serve a double bed to pay, a bed by night and almost anything, from a mantel to an upright piano by day. The new bed for small apartments is said to be built in the ceiling of the wall. It lets down like the upper berth in a sleeping car, and is made ready for the occupants in much the same manner. There is nothing impossible in such a scheme. By and by we may have large bedrooms to serve as dressing rooms, and sleep in the drawing room. It sounds a little queer, but it would be better than sleeping in the dark, airless closets which pass for bedrooms in many flats.

Another improvement which it is possible to make in small apartments is in the matter of doors. Why not make them to slide into the walls instead of opening against the walls? Many of the larger apartments are fitted with sliding doors, but few if any, small flats or tenements are so provided. Of course, sliding doors are a little more expensive.

There will be a concert in the Sixth Ward Amusement Hall, Jan. 25 and 26. All invited.

A Bit of Curran's Wit.

An Irishman loves a joke so well that he never forgets a word of a good one always given. In a book of recollections by an old member of the Irish Parliament is an amusing illustration of Curran's ready wit. A certain judge, Lord Norbury, was famous for the alacrity with which he condemned prisoners to death when he might have pronounced a more merciful sentence. On one occasion when he was dining in public with the foremost members of the Dublin bar he helped himself to some meat, at the same time asking: "Is this hung beef?" "Not yet," said Curran, quickly. "Your lordship has not tried it."

Stuck Fast.

An amusing incident occurred in one of our rural churches a short time ago. The minister gave out the hymn, "Leave to God the Sowing Away." The regular preacher being absent, the duty devolved upon a good old deacon, who commenced, "I love to steal, and then broke down, falling his voice a little higher, he then sang, "I love to steal." At length, after a desperate cough, he made a final demonstration, and roared out, "I love to steal!" The effort was too much. Every one but the parson was laughing. He rose, and with the utmost coolness said: "Seeing our brother's propensities, let us pray 'Thy Will be done.'"

WHY AMERICANS OF THE FUTURE WILL BE BLACKHAIRED.

"The Americans of the future will be black-haired, as the Indians whom our ancestors found here on their arrival," says Dr. Robert W. Rogers, professor of Drew Theological seminary, Madison, N. J.

Dr. Rogers thinks the climate of America acts slowly on the human hair through the generations, turning the blondest locks darker and darker until absolute blackness is reached.

However, the red head will survive, he believes. A thousand years from today, Dr. Rogers foresees an occupation of straight black-haired people.

Dr. Rogers made the assertion that American hair is turning black while he was talking on how the human race may be distinguished from one another, and he said that, although a thousand years may pass before black becomes the universal color of American heads of hair, the tendency today in this country is toward black.

He says that men of science are today following the opinion of Charles Darwin, from whom they obtained it, that mankind goes back to one pair of human beings—that the white, black, brown and all colors and races of men came from this pair. Of the many ways of pointing out the race a person came from, he said, the structure, arrangement and color of the hair enters into the classification, but the color is about the least important.

Going back to the early people of the earth, Dr. Rogers said the Hebrews nearly all had dark or black hair. Occasionally there was a head of auburn hair to be found in the Hebrew race, and the Hebrews thought this a beautiful color. David, Dr. Rogers said, had auburn hair and a ruddy skin, although he came from a dark-haired, brownish-red-skinned people. In studying the colors of hair among the races from ancient times down through the ages, he found that in its colors hair "goes" as does a flower. There is no way for science to account for it, he said, and one cannot account for the auburn hair of a child which sometimes comes to a family, as the grandfather, grandmother, or any of the ancestors may not have had auburn hair.

Dr. Rogers says that the land in which man lives often has a good deal to do with the color of the hair. When the white men first came to this country they found the Indians had black hair. The white men have been in this land long enough for the color of their hair to take a turn toward black.

Too Nice.

Gen. Horace Porter was talking about a French artist.

"The man is talented, and a good conversationalist," he said; "but he is too gushing. He is oversympathetic. In his desire to be agreeable he goes too far."

"Perhaps I can best explain what I mean by a little story—the story of a young girl."

"This young girl's sweetheart said to her one evening:

"Were you aware that I passed your house last night?"

"She gave him a glance full of reproach."

"Of course I was," she said. Do you think I would not know my step?"

"But he, at this, grew grave and distrustful, for he had passed in a cab."
