BRIGHTON NOTES.

The memory of the oldest inhabitant does not recall anything like the storm that we have had during the past week. At the same time of year, in spite of this, however, the stages both from Sugar and Park City, have been crowded right along, and the roads dried up so rapidly that Brighton has never seen a more delightful.

A feature of the week was the second visit paid to the camp by President Smith, who was again the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Heber J. Grant. On Tuesday an informal entertainment was held at the Gates cottage, at which President Smith was present. Miss Emma Lucy Gates singing and reading, and Miss M. M. Babcock also giving several charming recitations. The assembly was dismissed with a prayer by President Smith. Among the 50 or more guests were C. A. Blackkins, of the White Steamer company, and George T. Odell, both of whose automobiles were employed to bring up the party arriving on Tuesday. The occupants of the two machines were President Smith, Heber J. Grant, H. G. Whitcomb, Mr. and Mrs. George T. Odell, Miss Addie Hampton, Mrs. Pauline Davies of Ely, Jesse Smith, Mrs. J. P. Dunn, Miss Smedley and Mr. Henry Daniel. On the return trip Miss Emma Lucy Gates and Mrs. Alice K. Smith were brought to Salt Lake.

Mr. Hawkins expressed himself as delighted with the resort and the property of the White Steamer company, which was the machine which won the hill climbing contest in Salt Lake. The run up the canyon, which is always a feat, was made by the White Steamer and Mr. Odell's Franklin in 1 hour and 49 minutes.

Major Richard W. Young is in camp for two weeks. His son Richard is here also fresh from a trip to Alaska.

In Woman's World.

Is there any one who does not need linen shirts and shirt-waist dresses? The going to tell you about some attractive ones that can be started on a cool day and finished before there is a change in the temperature, says Helen Berkeley-Lloyd, in the Deseret. The glibly smart, with a few half-inch tucks, and the blouse with the open throat and soft turndown collar.

And the skirts? Well, if I were sewing for speed, I would choose one of the new gored circular skirts with as few goes as possible, unless my avocations absolutely demanded the slenderness of the many-gored skirt. The five and six gored circular skirts are always good, but there is a new three-gored skirt that is very smart. It has a very wide front panel that can button from waist to hem. Then there is another good skirt that is quite new and smart. It has a box plait at the front and another at the back and the one-piece sides are clever.

If you are looking for an adorable jumper waist for a soft silk or voile dress, let me tell you about one that can be fashioned very quickly. It is made from a reasonably consistent material doubled over at the shoulder line. Cut out a round neck, hem the side edges for armholes and join a short seam under each arm. Then there is another good skirt that is quite new and smart. It has a box plait at the front and another at the back and the one-piece sides are clever.

The disadvantages of winning a beauty competition become evident in one's morning mail. At least this is the opinion of Miss Ivy Close, who is a committee of 15,000 portraits, recently acquired as the most beautiful woman in England, surpassing the Christy Tabor's standard of American pulchritude, Miss Marguerite Frey.

Miss Close gave utterance to several sapient remarks about that time, recommending as an aid to the achievement of beauty tea, coffee, lobster, and cucumber for internal application, and "any nice handy soap" for external use. This willingness to divulge her secret has brought her the diurnal correspondence which she now finds a burden.

"If you had raven-black hair and brown eyes, would you buy a dark red or a sky-blue dress?" wrote one beauty-seeker. "It is really true that coal-dust is a good thing to clean your teeth with?" another anxiously asked. One lady demanded to know whether Miss Close believed in boiled milk taken the last thing at night—a test of faith to which the advocate of lobster and cucumber could propound no sober answer.

Miss Close has also received letters of a conchoidal nature from strange gentlemen. "I am handsome and thoroughly domesticated," wrote one correspondent. "I would never stay at the club after 1 o'clock in the morning, do not drink, never smoke in the drawing room," etc.—the last word being evidently an instance of elastic currency. Another author was more original. "I am awfully busy this week," he wrote, "but all the same am frightfully keen on marrying you. I shall have an afternoon off on Tuesday next, if you have nothing better to do, don't you think we might get married then?"

Does home-finding pay? asks the July Delinquent. The following story is a true one from the experience of one of the oldest workers in the movement for securing shelter for homeless children.

BARONESS TAKAHIRA, WIFE OF JAPANESE AMBASSADOR.

The Baroness Takahira, wife of the Japanese ambassador to the United States, has spent many years with the baron at his various diplomatic posts throughout the world, and is, therefore, splendidly fitted to uphold the social side of the embassy's duties in Washington. She was born of a noble family and was educated in Japan, but under European instructors. She speaks French like a native, but had not so late as two months ago acquired a thorough acquaintance with English. She loves to shop in American cities, and can frequently be seen doing a tour of the Washington shopping district in a big automobile belonging to the embassy.

Several years ago an 8-year-old girl came under our care, whose mother was one of the most depraved creatures of whom it is possible to conceive. She was physically, mentally and morally diseased and a morphia fiend. For a time she received out-door relief, but when we got the guardianship of the child, she was a bright, attractive girl, but had no idea of right or wrong, and was very headstrong. We placed her in several homes, and finally got her in to the hands of a family who saw in her the image of their lord, and for his sake were willing to be patient with her failings, and they were many. The family lived in a village where she had good school advantages, but she had a propensity to take (I will not say steal) anything she fancied in the house and give it to the children of the village. Notwithstanding their patience, there would come times when they felt they could not keep her any longer. At such times I would visit them and speak words of encouragement, while I would give the girl a "certain lecture." Thus she grew until about 17 years of age, when I received a letter from the foster-father (who was almost broken-hearted), saying the girl had run away and was staying at a farmhouse about five miles distant; that the young man she kept company with was a good, industrious fellow and was willing to marry her. I wrote her, "Get them married at once," and at the same time I wired the clerk of the court, giving my consent. When married, the foster-parents took them to their home until they had time to build a house for themselves, and also gave them land on which to build, besides helping them in other ways to get started in housekeeping. The girl is now the mother of three nice children.
