LAMENESS OF THE LAW The subject of "lynch law" has been frequently handled in terms condemnatory of its adoption under any circumstances. "Judge Lynch's" circuit used to be considered as belonging only in the South and the West. Properly there should be no such thing as mob law or popular execution of popular vengeance. There ought to be no necessity for it. The law ought to meet the requirements of every case, and the administrators of the law should be honest and firm enough to maintain and dispense it, while its exfeatures of the English system of jurisprud nee is the promptness of its judgment and the certainty of its penalties. Detected crime cannot procure long delays, nor when sentence is pronounced avoid its

The laws relating to these crimes need changing. Forcible violation of female chastity should be a capital offense. Money compensation for seduction and kindred crimes should be wiped off every statute book. They should be punished by the severest penalties. In theory, virtue is reckoned dearer than life; can never be truly repaired.

These are subjects for our statesmen and legislators, and they should be studied and understood by all who have at heart the welfare and peace of the community.
