DOES TIME CHANGE PRIN-

Ir is the fashion with modern Christian ministers to assume as an accepted fact, requiring neither argument statistics nor testimony to support it, that polygamy debases the family, destroys the home, brutalizes both sexes and shuts out that refinement and those graces which refinement and those graces which till 8 a.m. the family influence ought to cultivate and make perfect. This idea, advanced as a self-evident or at least indisputable proposition, once entertained in the mind, the reasoning, evicence and numerous instances to the contrary, which the defenders of polygamy can cite in controversy, are wasted upon the monogamist where the sanctifying influences of home and social affection are felt and exercised at least as powerfully as in any monogamic household under the sun. In vain they may point to virtuous, pure minded and lovely girls, to stalwart, honorable and dutiful sons, reared in the plural family relation. The dogma is accepted that this cannot be, and the conclusion follows that it is not.

We could not help pendering on this false notion entertained by many worthy people in the world, when we read to-day a synopsis in the New York Herald of a discourse delivered at a "christening," erroneously-call "baptism," of a num-session.
