Listen to Gladstone on the Armenian Question.

ABDUL HAMID'S CRIME.

The Proper Steps to Be Taken by Great Britain.

WITHDRAW THE EMBAASSY.

Europe Not Likely to Go to War to Order to Continue the Murders in Turkey.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—An enthusiastic crowd assembled this morning in the vicinity of Hengist's corner, anxious to hear Gladstone. The doors opened at 10 o'clock, and at 11 the vast auditorium was packed.

Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, Mr. Herbert Gladstone and other members of the family arrived in the city at noon, being welcomed at the railway station by 2,000 people. At the entrance to Hengist's corner Gladstone was received by wildly enthusiastic applause of the crowd unable to obtain admission. When he entered the auditorium the roar of applause could have been heard a mile away. The cheering continued a long time after Gladstone had stepped briefly on the platform at 12:30 p.m. and bowed gravely in acknowledgment of the enthusiastic welcome.

The Earl of Derby presided and upon the platform were many persons of distinction. After the local formalities the following resolution, proposed by a Conservative and seconded by a Liberal was adopted by acclamation:

"That this meeting desires to express its indignation and abhorrence at the cruel treatment to which Armenians are subjected by Turkish rulers and of the massacre which recently occurred at Constantinople, which is a disgrace to the civilization of the nineteenth century."

Gladstone rose to speak and bowed repeatedly in response to shouts of cheering. When able to make himself heard, after a few preliminary remarks, he moved the following resolution, which was received with thunderous applause, the audience rising, waving hats, handkerchiefs, sticks and umbrellas.

"That this meeting trusts her majestic majesty, realizing to the fullest extent the terrible condition in which the Armenians are placed, will do everything possible to obtain for them full security and protection and by a meeting despatching to the provinces of Armenia, the audience rising, waving hats, handkerchiefs, sticks and umbrellas."

Gladstone declared his submission to the principles enshrined in the resolution and as he stepped into the matter party sympathy was rekindled.

"I entertain a lively hope and a strong belief that the present deplorable situation is not due to any act or default of the government of this great country," he said. (Cries of "No.")

"The present movement is based on the broad grounds of humanity and not directed against the maintenance of any particular form of government, with the exception of the Turkish empire, the evidence of whose barbaric rule is a crime of the first magnitude."

"Now, in the guilt of the massacre is added the impudence of denial which will continue just as long as Europe is unable to see the truth."

"I do not think it is an exaggeration to say it was in the Sultan's palace, and there only, that the inspiration has been supplied and the policy devised of the whole series of massacres. When the Sultan enters a mosque he has his own capital, and the eyes of the world are turned to him. He is the symbol of the empire, and he appears to have given the very word of what is possible for him to do."

"Gladstone alluded to the impudence of the Sultan's denial of the massacre, saying: 'I believe the continued presence of the Ambassador at Constantinople has given direct countenance to the Sultan, who is thus thus encouraged. I have said that a little while ago, with your consent, that did not in itself mean anything, and I think the fact alone would be enough to encourage him. [Cheers.] And it should be followed by a demand of the Turkish Ambassador from London. Such countenance would be the right of conquest and not of conquest. When diplomatic relations are suspended, England should inform the Sultan that he would consider the suspension of his just and human demands. I do not believe Europe would make war to leave the Sultan in possession of more than he is entitled to in the usual and dignified history of human crime.' [Loud applause.]

Gladstone spent twenty minutes and did not seem fatigued. Before the end of his address a party of Englishers came there was a spontaneous outbreak of patriotism, every body present standing head bowed and singing God Save the Queen.

The resolution adopted will be forwarded to the cabinet ministers.
