In Women's World.

Wife off in the elevator! In New York they did for a countryman or an East Elder the joy who doesn't remove his top covering when a woman gets aboard the lift—that is expected possibly in a few downtown office buildings where everybody is too busy to be polite. And just now Providence, which is near Boston by rail and Gotham in metropolitan aspirations, is animatedly discussing the potential question. Prominent women of the Rhode Island capital, earnestly enough, are inclined to take sides against the amenity due to their sex. Thus the wife of the President of Brown university suggests that in this era of overpopulation head gears women rather than men should remove their hats. Again says Miss Grace Dowsorth, author of the inimitable "Letters of Jennie Allan," coming to the rescue of the reputation of her fellow-townsmen: "Providence men are more polite than Boston men. It seems to be more the custom for them to remove their hats in elevators here than it is in either New York or Boston, especially the latter. Still, I do not consider it necessary. An elevator is merely a corridor and does not call for such rules as prevail in a private place."

Many a boy has gone to bed to find because his family criticized or denounced his effort at playing the violin; made fun of a simple little composition or story which he wrote; discouraged his attempt to make some little mechanical device, or threw a wet blanket on his dreams, laughing at his prediction of what he would do in the future.

A girl who has recently come into great prominence in his profession says that when, tremblingly, he told his father what he wanted to be, he was told that a painted cell was the only place for a boy with such crazy ideas, and that he was forced for years to do that which God had forbidden in every fiber of his being, and against which every drop of blood in him protested.

The father who has made up his mind that his son must continue his business and keep his estate intact, is not in a position to decide on the boy's bent—his special aptitude. He is prejudiced at the very outset.

The reason why there are so many mediocre men and women in the world and so many failures is because they never found their right place.

Everywhere we see men and women, capable of much better things, who were discouraged and diverted from their natural bent when young. Their own families did not take stock in them; they laughed at their young ambitions and strangled their aspirations, either by harsh treatment, or

The idea rather caught my fancy and began to look for dead animals and forgotten favorites who doubtless awaited the fate of nations by the cut of their gowns or the requity of an elbow sleeve in days gone by. I saw with static Marguerite of Valois in garb—the new shade of red that is as old as the gooseberry from which takes its name. Her sleeves were stretched down and pinned the entire length with gold buttons that should have borne the arms of Valois and Orleans. Perhaps they did, but I had not at the entrance of the Ritz before I had a chance to ascertain.

I read the dark, sinister history of Beatrice Cenci in the scabbles of another slave below a laughing girl, and I passed Anne of Brittany in her favorite Benicaville blue with the whole Wall of Troy castigated on her sleeves from her elbow to her wrist. I saw a famous creole beauty, the Countess Josephine Bonaparte, in a small, close sleeve of unpretentious cut, as Madame Bonaparte, wife of the First Consul, in a long, narrow sleeve that looked quite modern till I saw that it belonged to the elixir in true, fashionable fashion; as the Empress of France in a small puff sleeve in an evening gown displayed in a show window.

A GREEN AND SILVER HOUSE GOWN.

On midday's afternoons at home, she wears a graceful costume somewhat less formal in conception than the gown built for visiting wear. This Paris-made frock of dusty-olive—one of the new shades in cloth—has particularly effective sleeves of frilled chiffon with little jabots down the outer edge of the arm. Beneath the bust and over the arm are broad bands of silver and green thread embroidery, and at the side hangs a foil made of this embroidery. The little vest of pale salmon pink satin opens over a lace yoke which is dyed to match the olive cloth, and over the satin vest fasten triangular flaps of light olive velvet. With this gown the dressmaker sent home a fillet for the hair made of salmon pink velvet to match the vest, and this fillet fastens over the forehead with a round button of coral pink enamel.

what is ever worse, ridicule; and their teachers did not understand them.

You cannot read the sealed message which God has wrapped up in your young boy or girl, and you cannot read it in your sacred soul. It seems to be more the custom for them to remove their hats in elevators here than it is in either New York or Boston, especially the latter. Still, I do not consider it necessary. An elevator is merely a corridor and does not call for such rules as prevail in a private place."

Who can estimate what this new era means to the plain girl, the girl with splendid mental powers but who may be physically unattractive, or who may prefer a single life?

WAITING FOR SOME MAN TO COME ALONG

There are a variety of opinions in regard to the condition of unmarried women, and a number of investigators are busily discussing the question. The following is taken from the Success magazine:

Woman has been handicapped through the ages by being brought up to think that there is not much worth while in life outside of marriage.

How many precious years and opportunities for growth, life enlargement she has missed while waiting for marriage.

Even today, in this progressive age, we see young women everywhere with splendid possibilities who seem to be just waiting, waiting, waiting for what they have been brought up to believe is the supreme event in their lives.

Many of them might broaden their education and improve themselves wonderfully while they are waiting for the right man to come along. Did they but know it, they are not half as likely to find the right man while waiting idly, as when they are vigorously preparing themselves for a large and useful life.

It is most unfortunate that any girl should be brought up today with the antiquated idea that marriage is everything and that other things do not count much.

The traditions of the past, however, are rapidly falling away from the twentieth century. In this new era of thought, women of all departments of life—vast fields of usefulness are awaiting women on every side. She is realizing that achievement is within her grasp, and she can be just as independent as

SOMETHING NEW IN A MOTORING HAT.

At first glance the trimming on this motor hat seems to be two big, fringed pinked flowers; but look closer and discover that the "flowers" are really clusters of tiny waxes massed in rosette effect. Of course these feminine ornaments are of the manufactured kind and no tender-hearted woman need feel a qualm about wearing bird accessories so frankly artificial. The soft lobes of the feathers are matched by the anti-striated veil of chiffon which is folded softly around the crown, the ends falling over the brow to the breast the chin. A motor hat in quiet colors is always in best taste and it is a clever note in design. It may be added by the extra veil, which will be found complete over this little hat for long rides against the wind.
