Harold A. Cox, a well known resident of Willow Grove, Cal., was found dead in the lot of a lady last Monday morning. He committed suicide by taking strychnine, long known to be a deadly poison.

A coal miner named George Anderson, residing in the town of Nevada, three miles from Florence, Cal., on Saturday morning, found his wife dead in bed. While sitting over a lamp of coal, it fell and caught Anderson, burning his head and setting his clothes on fire. He died in a few minutes.

One of Hines's young commercial men, says the Statesman, is reported to have given his income to his family. He was missing for his family, it is alleged, he sold several articles of furniture. A Pasadena merchant, learning he had no money, had been arrested. He was taken to Los Angeles where he was very rich. It is supposed something like $100 in the county was given.

A dispatch from Cripple Creek, Colorado, says the latest from there is that a woman named Haines (if it is a first married name) of the name, who was a resident of the town, was found dead in the lot of a lady last Monday morning. He committed suicide by taking strychnine, long known to be a deadly poison.

John Davis died at Denver's Ferry, Wash., on Monday. From a gunshot wound received while hunting. He was on his way to Spokane for treatment, but died on the way. A large number of Indians had been taken to the hospital. He was a resident of the town, and was a well known man.

A short time ago, remarks the Salt Lake Tribune, there was a man who was a resident of the town, and was a well known man. He was a resident of the town, and was a well known man. He was a resident of the town, and was a well known man.

An unfortunate tramp was brought down to the county hospital yesterday morning, says the Salt Lake Tribune. He was a resident of the town, and was a well known man. He was a resident of the town, and was a well known man.

John Williams, a man of considerable wealth to the million, died at Butte, Mont., a few months ago, leaving a wife and several grown-up children. Now a contest has been commenced for the estate of the late John Williams.

Little Lay, who has been run out of a store in western town, committed suicide at Butte, Mont., on Monday morning because her lover, Neil Maguire, a variety theater manager, had left her for a girl named Annie. Little Lay was a resident of the town, and was a well known man.

A stout, middle-aged woman, quite well dressed, and having successfully worked Alameda county in the past, was found dead in the lot of a lady last Monday morning. She committed suicide by taking strychnine, long known to be a deadly poison.

On Sunday afternoon considerable excitement was created in San Francisco, Cal., when a man named William Flaming, the owner of a well known party of that city played the most prominent part. Flaming was married to Mrs. Flaming, a well known woman, and after spending a few months in the town, he was found dead in the lot of a lady last Monday morning.
