ALARMING SPREAD OF CONTAGION

Smallpox and Measles Increasing in South Ogden—Vigorous Cleaning Up Campaign.

MRS. SARAH ANN SMITH DEAD

Noted Asparagus Duffering Case in Police Court—Western Bottling Co. —Junction City Briefs.

Ogden, May 13.—The health officers of the city are at a loss to account for the sudden development of measles which has appeared in the south portion of the city. The outbreak of contagion which numbers five new cases of measles and one of smallpox, was reported to the health department yesterday. Extra precautionary measures are being taken by the authorities to prevent a repetition of the spread of the disease as occurred last winter.

It was thought that the contagion was nearly eradicated, when it suddenly began spreading and before measures could be formulated, it had become epidemic. Since the beginning of the week an average of seven cases have been reported daily.

In speaking of the spread of the contagion yesterday afternoon Sanitary Inspector George Shorten said, "We can trace the smallpox which is now in eight places in the city to the original case which was hidden by a family quarrel. Since the beginning of the week an average of seven cases have been reported daily."

The diseases seem to be wholly confined to the district south of Twenty-sixth street. The sudden appearance of measles in this district is puzzling the members of the board of health. The doctors agree that the condition of the weather is favorable to the spread of the contagion and unless care is exercised by the public, it will spread over a larger territory.

In the public schools great precaution is being taken by the officials to prevent the spread of measles so that the last month of the school will not be broken by the absence of several hundred pupils.

The health department has recommended that keeping the yards clean will greatly assist in keeping the contagion checked. With this in view an active campaign has been inaugurated in many districts of the city for a general cleaning up of yards. Residents have been ordered to clean their premises and if they have not done so the health officers have had the work done and charged the expense of the same to the property owners.

NOTED ASPARAGUS CASE.
In the police court late yesterday afternoon the case of the state against George A. Boyd was continued in order to get more witnesses. The case afforded some interest in that a rural detective gave a graphic description of how he traced the alleged crime to Boyd. The charge against Boyd was that of stealing 150 pounds of asparagus, valued at $5 from Abraham Maw of Plain City, where the crime was alleged to have been committed.

After a rainstorm on May 3, Maw discovered upon entering his asparagus field that the choice stalks had been taken. He immediately called in Constable Hutchinson, who went to work upon the case. Upon his arrival at the field of the crime Hutchinson took a measurement of the tracks in the moist earth and then followed the tell-tale tracks to a point very close to Boyd's home. In order to confirm his deductions and conclusions as did Sheriff Holmes—in the play—Hutchinson invited Boyd to go to the field where, according to the testimony of Hutchinson, Boyd's shoes left the tracks near
