THE FAMILY RECORD.

The date, the age, the name:

For home has never seemed so dear

As since our baby came; No child before was haif so sweet,

And never babe so wise;

And, John, the neighbors say, indeed,

It has its father's eyes." "Nay, wife, I'm sure they're like yo

The rogue's his mother's boy. low strange that such a tiny form How strange that such a tipy form
Can cause such boundless joy!
And you will have him named for me?
Come, think it o'er again;
For 'John' is but a homely name—"
"Nay, do not drop your pen.
"For 'John' shall be his name, my dear,
It is his father's own;
And though a hundred more were given,
Pil call him that alone.
His father's oyes, his father's face,

His father's form, I'm sure; God grant he have his father's heart, Life's hardship to endure! Well, there the written down at last;

The record is complete. Senceforth we'll lay our loving hearts Beneath our baby's feet. Ah, wife, our home's a humble place— We're humble folks—that's true; But I'm a king of boundless wealth In that young rogue and you. So, baby, wink and blink, my boy, Your mother's eyes "'Nay, John They are his father's eyes indeed; That I insist upon!" Well, be that as it may, his mouth

Is waiting for a kiss.

Say, do I judge amiss?"
