Sad End of A Newspaper Man.

HOW A SUCCESSFUL LONDON EDITOR WAS WRECKED.

In newspaper sets there has rarely been a more painful case than that of the late Mr. Morier Evans. Since boyhood I have known him as an energetic journalist—half man of business, half writer. As city editor of the Times he showed considerable knowledge of financial subjects, and for long years after leaving the Times he was the life and soul of the Standard. His quick ways, heavy voice and bustling manner can never be forgotten by his friends. He was always great upon the virtues of self-denial, and upon the duty of providing for the future. It was a lesson to hear him show the folly of literary men dabbling in speculative literary projects. By his labors and by judicious use of opportunities in the way of investments, Mr. Evans amassed a considerable sum, and this time last year was probably worth £20,000. A dispute unhappily arose in the Standard office; old friends became exasperated against each other, and one morning, Mr. Evans and another left, hot-tempered and sore. Nothing would do but they must start another Tory daily paper, and at once poor Evans threw himself into it—his money as well as his labor. He was sure of success. He would listen to no prudential suggestions. But the Hour proved a failure. It was not so good as the Standard, and no fresh number of Tories were born expressly for buying it. To start a daily paper in London in these days with any hope of permanent profits, £200,000, I take it, must be spent. A thousand pounds is gone in a day. There is no maw so insatiable. Mr. Evans' thousands and then hundreds—the product of oh! how much industry and sagacity!—flew, and there was no return; no other cry than "give!" At last all went, and a week or two ago he was compelled to seek the protection of the Bankruptcy Court. He could not face the horror. Youth and middle age were gone, and he knew the world too well to expect to be happy in it as a ruined man. His health gave way, and he died of a broken heart. This is no romance, but a true story, and I grieve when I think of it. He had ever a kind word for young men, and his buoyant spirits made him a pleasant companion. It is painful to think now of the scenes in which he was the authoritative friend of others who he feared might be rash; to remember the innocent satisfaction with which he would allude to his own good management; and then to think of the gloom and agony that were waiting him.—London Letter.

NOTES FOR THE LADIES.

Washerwoman's motto—"While there's life there's soap."

"The one thing," says Jean Paul, which a maiden most easily forgets is how she looks—hence mirrors were invented."

There are ninety-one women in the Michigan University. Seven are studying law, thirty-six medicine, and forty-eight are developing their genius.

There is no telling what that intelligent coroner's jury will do next, since it has indicted a Connecticut man for shooting his wife, whom he upon honor "mistook for a stray cat."

A New York divorce lawyer's advertisement: "Hymeneal incompatibilities, as a specialty, delicately adjusted. 'Tis slavery to detain the hand after the heart hath fled."

Barney Williams was once acting in Philadelphia, and being disturbed by a child's cries, said, "Shure there's a nurse wanted." The woman retorted, "No Irish need apply," and retired triumphantly.

The London Lancet is of opinion that the constant exertion of the feet in using sewing machines is injurious to the health of women. It suggests the use of steam in large sewing establishments. [Well, they should not exert their feet constantly.]

The Providence Press tells of a married couple who were passing a jewelry store the other day. Her attention was attracted by a "perfectly lovely" pair of earrings. Said she, "Oh, Ned, go buy 'em!" And Ned went by 'em.

The most confiding woman lives in Providence. She went to an auction, and, knowing the prevalence of thieves at such places, asked a nice-looking young man to take care of her pocket book, containing eighty-five dollars. He is still taking care of it.

Cora, who is three years old, with the most roguish blue eyes that ever sparkled in a baby's head, was taken to church the other night by her mamma, and on her return she gave a new description of a baldhead by saying that she had seen a man whose hair was "all worn out."

Miss Lydia Thompson's agent says that in April he intends to "sell the title, repertoire, wardrobe and entire effects of the company." Now, if the purchaser could only secure the popularity of the company as well.

The names of the four Swedish girls who are attracting so much attention in Paris by their quartet singing of Scandinavian melodies, are Hilda Wideburg, Marie Pettersen, Amy Aberg and Wildelmina Soederlund.

A philosopher remarks that there is something peculiarly instructive in standing upon a street corner in a large city, and watching the men all rushing around trying to make money and the women all floating around trying to spend it.

Why will the men be so horrid? An Island Pond custom-house officer mistook the pannier of a homeward bound Vermont woman for her portmanteau, and she gradually collapsed thirty-three yards of silk, three yards of velvet, and numerous other et ceteras.

An old bachelor said: "There's more jewelry worn now-a-days than when I was young. But there's one piece that I always admired which I don't often see now." "What is that?" asked a young lady. "A thimble," was the reply.

The North German Gazette, by common report the organ of Prince Bismarck, recently contained an editorial advising electors not to permit their wives to influence their votes. It thinks that "all the qualities of women are made to disturb and bewilder the factors of political life, and bring misfortune on the affairs of man."

A Lady in Poughkeepsie found a little girl in the street crying bitterly, and asked her where she was going, she was so small to be out alone. "Down town to find my papa." "What is your father's name?" inquired the lady. "His name is papa." "But what does your mother call him?" She calls him papa." "What do you want of your papa?" I only want to kiss him." Just then a sister of the child, who was searching for her came and took possession of the little runaway, and told the pitiful story that the child's father, whom it dearly loved, had died recently, and she being tired of waiting had gone out to look for him.
