

BIG BIKE RACE NOW ON AGAIN

Iver Lawson and Frank Kramer
Will Meet Next Week in Two Events.

CHAPMAN HAS ARRANGED IT.

Events Will Be a Two Mile and a
Three Mile Heat, With Pace
Part of the Way.

Frank Kramer and Iver Lawson are going to ride after all and Salt Lake is going to see the two best bike riders in the world fight it out, not on one evening for the glory of the championship, but on two evenings next week for the more lustrous glory of two big gate receipts. Tuesday and Friday nights are the evenings on which the men meet, and their events are a two and three-mile

Kramer ought to be acclimated by this time, and therefore ought to be better able to hold his wind against the moment of the final sprint. This change in the nature of the race, from the previous condition of lack of seasoning in this altitude, and a pair of the best races ever pulled off at the same track should result in a Salt Lake is entitled to the meet. Local interest has grown in cycling for many years and the one race most wanted in this section is one between Kramer and Lawson for a final showing of strength.

UP TO CHAPMAN.
There has been trouble over the Lawson-Kramer match, and the second heat of a first series was called off for certain reasons as alleged, the announcement being made in a way calculated to stir public sentiment against certain writers, who did not express reviews of the situation just suitable to the management. The last for gate money, as when the "News" places the responsibility for the present trouble. It surpassed the management's love for the bike game and outstripped the management's interest in providing real races. One item of interest which would draw the public was compounded, and this in turn was compounded again until the structure simply fell over on the management, and it will be necessary to start over.

Interest in bike racing is not dead. It is more alive than ever. A manager willing to content himself with the money flowing in from the natural interest, will keep permanent good things in the game. With the public wanting a good bike game, and the manager wanting only an income, there is bound to be a time when their interests cease to harmonize. The "News" has shared with the Herald, the manager's blame for stopping the race between Kramer and Lawson. The "News" believes this race was not stopped in good faith, and that it was intended to pull it off later; that Lawson's alleged disqualification was merely national, and that he was reinstated for the moment the management saw gate money for a Lawson-Kramer race. In other words it is the belief of the "News" that Lawson accepted poor advice when he decided not to race in the second heat of his series. It was hoped that public sentiment would demand the race, as it does, and that against the papers the management tried to throw into the light as responsible for stopping the race.

SOME QUERIES.
To get at the truth of the recent Chapman trouble is a difficult matter. Some very near people to the center of action conflict in their theories. Very few of the riders advance the same reason for Lawson's not riding as that given out by Announcer Meakin. If depressed management could be given to the following questions, the public would know about all that there is to know:
Who advised Lawson not to ride? Chapman gave answer.
Who paid for the automobile which took a city editor down to the race to write the second meet, contradicting the previous report of the same paper's sporting editor, and giving opinions of Manager Chapman as facts?
Who believed when Lawson failed to ride that a public opinion would force the race to be held, and who stood ready to recede the suspension of Lawson, the minute gate money was in sight for this race?

How far outside of Salt Lake was the suspension of Lawson wired, and is it on record at the N. C. A. headquarters?
When these questions are cleared up there is still room for good bike meets, for the public has little concern with the manager's wad, just so it gets a good race for the money it pays.

APPARATUS FOR MEASURING THE GROWTH OF PLANTS.

The homemade apparatus herewith shown indicates by means of a pointer and dial the rate of growth of a plant.

A length of cotton weighted at one end, is attached to the top of the plant and passed over a wheel. Fixed to this wheel is the pointer, which is moved mechanically as the plant grows and so allows the weight to fall.

EVERY FARM AN EXPERIMENT STATION.

It has been said that we have not yet commenced to farm in the United States—we simply sow and reap. As compared with the intensive farm work in many sections of the old world, this approach of American farming is very true. But in these days of progress of agricultural colleges and experiment stations, and of comprehensive farm literature—a change is taking place which means the recognition of farming as a profession, calling for an extensive education and the full exercise of a man's best intellectual faculties. Agricultural colleges and experiment stations have been established where the young man can be educated for his profession, the same as the doctor or lawyer. The experiment farms are intended to supplement the work of the colleges, not only in assisting the agricultural student in his education, but through their bulletins to help all farmers in the solution of the problems which beset them.

But the making of experiments is not confined to the experiment station alone, nor is the work all to be done by the trained scientist, says Home and Farm. While a study of the work done at the various stations is most helpful, and the reports are eagerly studied by all progressive farmers, the directors in charge do not send out iron-clad rules to be blindly followed. They are at best valued suggestions and signposts, pointing toward better methods in agriculture.

It is not possible for all our farmers to attend an agricultural college; many of them cannot even take the short course, but by reading the bulletins, good agricultural papers and books, any farmer can get ideas that, when put into practice, will enable him to make valuable experiments at home. It is a fact that some of the best ideas have originated in practical observations and experiments upon the farm, and then been adopted by the trained agronomist.

The important lessons taught by the stations will not benefit the farmer if he only reads about what was done, without attempting to practice it. Despite all that has been done with corn, much more remains to be done, and one of the best ways for the farmer to enter into this interesting work of experimenting is to begin the improvement of corn in his fields. Planting is done for this season, but the farmer can try different methods of cultivation if he is still undecided about the relative merits of deep and shallow cultivation. He can select the best and earliest ripened ears this fall for seed the following spring; can be sure they are kept separate and thoroughly dried, and do some seed testing next winter.

There are some valuable lessons to be learned in the orchard during the summer—noting the effect of spraying, the thinning of the fruit on overloaded trees and the effect of a cultivated crop in an orchard. He can learn which is the best spring or fall-sown alfalfa.

The farmer's greatest studies should be himself and his adaptability and his farm and its capabilities. Without experiment and observation the farmer cannot ascertain which line of farming is best adapted to his temperament, nor can he learn what crops are best to grow on his farm to secure the highest success save by experiments with divers crops. Many fail because they are working in the wrong direction, trying to grow crops for which the soil of their farm is not adapted. All this calls for experiment which the farmer himself must carry on for himself.

LUXURIOUS STEAMERS OF A CHINESE COMMERCIAL CITY.

The cut represents the saloon of one of the fine steamers that are to be seen in the Chinese city of Canton, which is on the river of the same name, about eighty miles from the point at which it empties into the China sea. These boats are fitted up with marble beautifully inlaid and decorated with mirrors and painting.

BOATS AS PACK ANIMALS IN THE HIMALAYAN MOUNTAINS

Among some of the wild tribes that live at the foot of the Himalayan mountains the goat is used as a beast of burden. The scene herewith depicted is no uncommon sight. The animals are driven in flocks, each goat loaded with two bags of grain or its equivalent in weight.
