An overripe orange, for which he paid his last nickel, and which was being carried to his little sister who was ill, saved the life the other day of Andrew Dillon, a small negro boy who lives in Maryville, near Charleston. On his way nome the boy was attacked by a vicious buildog, which was frothing about the mouth. When the animal came rush-

Just as he did Dillon raised the orange in his right hand and hurled it. The dog was springing with his jaws open and the aim, which was wild, proved true. The orange went in the animal's mouth and far into his throat. For a moment he gasped and gave a violent twitch, but the fruit stuck. In the neantime the boy made his escape. RAMSEY FIXED IT.

When Joseph Ramsey Jr., the newly elected president of the Wabash rail-road, was superintendent of the Pittsroad, was superintendent of the Pitts-burg Southern, a small road in the coal district, Joseph Walton, a millionaire coal miner of Pittsburg, heard of his ability, and decided that Ramsey would be just the man to take charge of a road which he was then projecting. Walton went over to the small town where Ramsey made his headquarters in order to offer him the position. At the office he was told that Mr. Ramsey was out somewhere in the yards, so "the coal king" went out to look for him. The first man he came across was a grimy mechanic who was at work underneath an engine. "Where's Mr. Ramsey?" inquired

Walton. "I'm Ramsey," replied the man, and then, climbing out from under the loco-motive, he explained laughingly that Worcester, Mass., Aug. 20.—The close of three-quarters of a century of life finds the senior United States senator from Massachusatts, George F.
